Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3082) granting a pension to Henry C. Burgan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3083) providing for the adjudication of certain claims by the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3084) granting a pension to John Holland; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3085) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Holland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MONEY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

AMENDMENTS TO URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. TURNER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $412,572.70 to repay to the Government of Mexico money erroneously claimed by and paid to the United States on account of awards adjudged to have been fraudulently made in the La Abra and Weil claims, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed. Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $131,515.81 and $689,146.29 to reimburse the States of Maine and Pennsylvania, respectively, for expenses incurred in raising volunteers, and also providing for the reopening of claims of like character heretofore disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STEPHEN BIRD.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (8. 2973) entitled "A bill for the relief of Stephen Bird, executor of John Bird, deceased," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings before said committee on bills referred to it, the expenses thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

THE TRANSPORT SERVICE.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate, at his earliest convenience, the following informa-

Resolved. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate, at his earliest convenience, the following information:

First. The number and name and tonnage of Government transports now owned by the United States, with the dates of the purchase thereof, respectively, and from what person, firm, or corporation purchased, and the price for each, and terms of payment.

Second. The number, name, and tonnage, respectively, of Government transports now held by the United States or the War Department, if any, under lease, and the dates, respectively, of each of such leases, and the duration and terms thereof.

Third. The amounts paid by the Government for repairs on each of the transports hereinbefore referred to since the purchase or lease thereof, respectively, and to what person, firm, or corporation paid.

Fourth. The number of trips made by each Government transport between any port of the United States and the port of Manila, Philippine Archipelago, since January 1, 1901, and by what transports and from what port in the United States did each of such transports sail; also the number of trips made during the same period by Government transports from the port of Manila, Philippine Archipelago, to any port or ports of the United States, and by what transports and to what ports, respectively, in the United States were such arrivals.

Fifth. The total cost of the transport service between the United States and Manila, Philippine Archipelago, for the period from and including January 1, 1901, to and including December 31, 1901.

DORA REVELS LEONARD.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Dora Revels Leonard, administratrix of Hiram R. Revels, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Mississippi, $4.876.71, due him as a Senator of the United States in the Forty-first Congress, from the 4th of March, 1899, to the 23d of February, 1870, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PRINTING OF PAPER ON CHINESE EXCLUSION.

On motion of Mr. MASON, it was

PHILIPPINE CUSTOMS TARIFF.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CULBERSON, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all suggestions, statements, criticisms, and correspondence between the War Department, or any official thereof, and any person or corporation, and between the War Department, or any official thereof, and the Philippine Commission, relating to the customs tariff affecting the Philippine Islands which culminated in the tariff adopted by the Philippine Commission September 17, 1901.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Texas that all the information he calls for in the resolution was sent in and reached the committee room last evening. I have it here on my desk, and I was going to ask to-day that it be printed as a Senate document.

Everything that he asks for is here.

Mr. CULBERSON. In that case there is no necessity for the passage of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand the resolution, it applies entirely to the customs tariff?

Mr. CULBERSON. Entirely.

Mr. LODGE. Everything is here, as I think the Senator will find. I shall ask later that it be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. CULBERSON. That will be satisfactory, Mr. President.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be indefinitely postponed, in the absence of objection.
Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce.
Mr. CULBERSON. Before that is done, I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he has the statements and criticisms

Senator from Massachusetts if he has the statements and criticisms and correspondence with reference to the customs tariff in the Philippines now ready to be printed as a document?

Mr. LODGE. I understand they are all here. I have the comparison of the old Spanish tariff, the tariff as first made by the Commission, the correspondence with the War Department over the changes proposed by the War Department, and the tariff as finally agreed on by the Commission after its return. Here is a memorandum of the changes made by the Division of Insular Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of War, with the tariff law of 1901, as proposed by the United States Philippine Commission, with a statement of the reasons for every change. I understood from Colonel Edwards that everything had been sent understood from Colonel Edwards that everything had been sent in relating to the tariff.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The inquiry of the Senator from Texas was whether or not the Senator from Massachusetts had asked that it be printed as a document.

Mr. LODGE. I have not yet done so. I was going to make that request

Mr. CULBERSON. It seems to me that on the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, the matter he has in hand is not a full answer to the resolution. We want the correspondence between persons and corporations which may have been had with the War Department as the basis of the action of that Department in making certain recommendations to the Philippine Commission. We understand from the report of the Secretary of War that certain changes were recommended by the Secretary and adopted by the Philippine Commission, but the inquiry cov-ered by the resolution is to obtain the correspondence between the War Department and persons or corporations in this country with reference to the advisability and the expediency of the changes made by the Secretary of War.

Now, unless the Senator from Massachusetts will state that that correspondence is here and will be printed as a document, I must insist upon the consideration at this time of the resolution introduced by me vectories.

introduced by me yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know how much of that is given here or whether all of it is given. I supposed from the statement made to me that everything was given. Of course the hearings before the Philippine Commission are not given. Those are given in the empendix to their report.

in the appendix to their report.

Mr. CULBERSON. They are not asked for in the resolution.

Mr. President, there being some doubt about it, I insist upon the consideration at this time of the resolution introduced by me yesterday, and I ask for its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the indefinite postponement of the resolution offered by him be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and a reconsideration is had. The resolution is now before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution may lie over for a day, until the material which I have here, and which I have had no time to examine, can be printed, and we can see what there is and what additional we need.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think that that request is not unreasonable, and I am willing that the resolution shall go over until to-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table until to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the department of commerce bill.

Mr. LODGE. Before that is done, I will ask unanimous consent that these documents, to which reference has already been made, may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I think the bill proposing to create a department of commerce ought to allow some little time for the Calendar. The morning hour is generally for the Calendar and there are important matters on it that should be disposed of. I ask that the Calendar be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama objects to the request of the Senator from Minnesota and asks that the Calendar may be proceeded with in recular codes.

that the Calendar may be proceeded with in regular order.

Mr. NELSON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HOAR. I do not mean to interfere with my friend from Minnesota, but I should like to suggest that there are a great many cases on the Calendar not of much public importance, but each one of them probably affects the comfort and happiness of some one of them probably affects the comfort and happiness of some life or family. These are pension bills and a few other bills for relief, one particularly that I have in mind for a constituent of mine. When we get launched on the long legislative matters which are before us we may not get at the Calendar again for a month or two. I will not interfere now with my friend's request, but I hope that at some early day after this bill is passed we may give two or three hours to the Calendar and clear it off as far as possible.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will let us go on with the Calendar for an hour or so. There are four or five bridge bills on the Calendar which I have reported, and the parbridge bills on the Calendar which I have reported, and the parties are pressing me and say it is very important that they should be passed. I trust the Senator will let us run on with the Calendar for an hour, and then his bill can come up.

Mr. NELSON. In view of the request of the Senator from Arkansas, I will withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota withdraws his motion, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar in regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE.

The bill (S. 493) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia" was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator reporting that bill is not present. Let it be passed over without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. Without prejudice.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

The bill (S. 451) to provide for acquiring the rights necessary for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans was announced as the next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill take the same course. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

TRANSFER OF CENSUS RECORDS.

The bill (S. 1833) providing for the transfer of census records and volumes to the Census Office, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over for the present. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over for the present.

WELLINGTON D. CURTIS.

The bill (S. 1029) granting an increase of pension to Wellington D. Curtis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Wellington D. Curtis, late of Company D, Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be opercessed for a third reading, read the third time, and received.

to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEMPY FRENCH.

The bill (S. 2485) granting an increase of pension to Tempy French was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Tempy French, widow of John L. French, late of Company E, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and to pay her a pension of $15 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NELLIE M. EMERY.

The bill (S. 2390) granting a pension to Nellie M. Emery was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Nellie M. Emery, widow of George W. Emery, late of Company H, Sixth and Eleventh Regiments New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $$ per month sion of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA.

The bill (S. 1295) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., approved February 13, 1891, and amended by an act approved January 28, 1893, and by an act approved April 21, 1898, and to authorize the Omaha Bridge and Terminal Railway Company, successor to the Interstate Bridge and Street Railway Company, successor to the interstate Bridge and Street Railway Company, to complete, reconstruct, and change a bridge for railway and street railway purposes over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, line 22, section 1, after the word "assigns," to insert:

And be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War, and in case of any litigation concerning any alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river on account of said bridge, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge is located.

So as to read:

Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, street-railway cars, and motor cars at such reasonable rates of toll and under such reasonable rules and regulations as may be prescribed by said corporation, its successors and assigns, and be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War, etc.

so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, or after completion, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and said bridge shall be changed at the cost of the owners thereof, from time to time, as the Secretary of War may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, section 6, line 14, after the word "reserved," to strike out:

And the right to require any changes in said structure or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved;

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OACOMA, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 911) authorizing the Federal Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the village of Oacoma, Lyman across the Missouri River at or near the village of Oacoma, Lyman County, S. Dak., was announced as next in order on the Calendar. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] to this bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask that the consideration of the bill be deferred for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire the bill to go over without prejudice?

and neglect of a soldier of the United States Army.

Mr. HAWLEY. I notice, on looking more closely into the matter, that while the bill provides for $5,000, that General Schofield, in reviewing the case, approved the bill, but recommends the striking out of "five" and the insertion in lieu thereof of the word "three;" so as to read "three thousand dollars." I ask that the bill lie over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

Mr. HAWLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the bill for the relief of Richard King.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I asked to have the bill go over because the original amount was $5,000 as compensation to the wounded man, and I found in reading the report from the War Department that General Schofield said the bill was all right, but he recommended striking out "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three." As we submitted that as a part of our report, I suppose we ought to make the change, and I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, before the word "thousand" it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read: "The sum of $3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS S. DAVIDSON.

The bill (S. 1115) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Cavalry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as a substitute what I send to the desk, which is a copy of the bill passed at the last session of the Senate. I submit it as a substitute for what was reported by mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to revoke and annul General Court-Martial Orders, No. 93, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, November 15, 1875, approving and confirming the proceedings, findings, and sentence of the general court-martial, which convened at Fort Brown, Tex., September 18, 1875, dismissing First Lieut. Francis S. Davidson, Ninth Cavalry, and to issue to him a certificate of discharge of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowance shall be paid to him by reason of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Is it not the purpose of the committee to authorize the restoration of Lieutenant Davidson by the President?

Mr. COCKRELL. No. That was expressly excluded by the report made at the last session.

Mr. HOAR. What was the decision of the committee at the present session?

Mr. COCKRELL. The decision of the committee was the same that it was at the last session-to make the same report, and the same report was made; but by mistake the original bill, which had been rejected at the last session, was submitted with the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amend-ment was concurred in.

MEDALS FOR OFFICERS AND CREWS.

The bill (S. 1971) to provide suitable medals for the survivors of the officers and crew of the U.S. sloop of war Cumberland was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments

The first amendment was, on page 1, section 1, line 3, after the words "of the," to strike out "Treasury" and insert "Navy;" in line 5, after the word "and," to strike out "crew" and insert crews;" in line 6, before the word "Cumberland," to strike out "crews;" in line 6, before the word "Cumberland," to strike out "sloop of war" and insert "vessels of war;" in line 7, before the word "who," to insert "Congress, and Minnesota;" in the same line, after the word "said," to strike out "sloop" and insert "vessels;" in line 8, before the word "was," to strike out "she" and insert "the Cumberland;" in line 11, after the word "and," to strike out "crew" and insert "crews;" on page 2, line 1, before the word "medal," to strike out "gold" and insert "bronze;" and in the same line, after the word "design," to strike out "not a vessed in price $50 for each of such medals;" so as to make the to exceed in price $50 for each of such medals;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain the number and names of the officers and crews now surviving of the United States vessels of war Cumberland, Congress, and Minnesota who were on board of said vessels at the time the Cumberland was sunk by the Confederate ram Merrimae in Hampton Roads, Virginia, and to provide, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to provide each of said officers and crews now surviving with a bronze medal, with proper superscription and design.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 2, line 4, before the word "is," to strike out "Treasury" and insert "Navy;" and in line 6, after the word "and," to strike out "crew" and insert crews;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to see that such medals are properly distributed to said surviving officers and crews.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide suitable medals for the survivors of the officers and crews of the United States vessels of war Cumberland, Congress, and Minnesota."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] who introduced the bill just passed authorizing the granting of medals, why he limited it to the survivors. Are not the heirs or descendants of the sailors as much entitled to this mark of honor as the survivors?

Mr. LODGE. I see no objection to that, I will say to the Senator from Missouri. The bill was handed to me by those interested in it. I had introduced it several times before. I see no reason why a medal should not be given to the heirs of those who have died.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there not every reason why it should be given to them?

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me proper.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, so that we may make the amendment I have suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be regarded as reconsidered, and the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time, will be reconsidered. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend by inserting "and the heirs of those deceased," so that the medals will go to the survivors and the heirs of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary. Insert, where proper, the words "and the heirs of those deceased."

Mr. SPOONER. How will that particular part of the bill read when amended?

Mr. LODGE. How will it read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as re-

The Secretary. After the word "surviving," at the bottom of page 1, insert "and the heirs of those deceased;" so that it will read as follows:

And to provide, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to provide each of said officers and crews now surviving and the heirs of those deceased with a bronze medal, with proper superscription and design.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am inclined to think that the word "heirs" ought to be inserted at another place. Let the Secretary read the bill as it now stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain the number and names of the officers and crews now surviving of the United States vessels of war Cumberland, Congress, and Minnesota who were on board of said vessels at the time the Cumberland was sunk by the Confederate ram Merrimac in Hampton Roads, Virginia, and to provide, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to provide each of said officers and crews now surviving and the heirs of the deceased with a bronze medal, with proper superscription and design.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to see that such medals are properly distributed to said surviving officers and crews.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 4, after the word "directed," it reads "to ascertain the number and names of the officers and crews now surviving." I rather believe that the words "and the heirs of those deceased" should be added there.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been absent from the Chamber. I reported this bill. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri if he proposes to give a medal to all the heirs of the deceased persons?

Mr. COCKREIL. It will be a medal in the page of the deceased persons?

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be a medal in the name of the deceased. Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. That is probably very proper. On hearing the amendment read it simply struck me that the proposition was to give a medal to each heir.

Mr. COCKRELL. On, no; it goes to the heirs of the deceased. Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "surviving," insert and the heirs of those deceased."

Mr. COCKRELL. That would include the heirs of the deceased, and it goes in the name of the deceased.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust there may not be any unseemly contention on the part of the heirs as to where the medal will be lodged. But I have no objection to the amendment. I presume the heirs will find some place to store it.

Mr. COCKRELL. They will all enjoy it, if it is granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not seem to me that the bill is quite right yet.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think not.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will require another amendment at the end of section 2. The Secretary will read section 2 as it has been amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to see that such medals are properly distributed to said surviving officers and crews.

Mr. COCKRELL. Add "and the heirs of those deceased."
The Secretary. Add the words "and the heirs of those deceased."

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that is right.
The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments. ments?

ments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide suitable medals for the officers and crews of the United States vessels of war Cumberland, Congress, and Minnesota."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WHEELING, W. VA.

The bill (S. 300) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at the city of Wheeling, the erection of a public building thereon at the city of Wheeling, State of West Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States court, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Wheeling, State of West Virginia, the cost of such site and building, including the vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators cluding the vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $400,000.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 3, after line 6, to add:

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President— The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock has

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the considera-tion of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been re-ported from the Committee on the Philippines with amendments.

Mr. LODGE. The bill, I believe, has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in what I have to say in regard to this bill I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the disputed points of the history of the last three years in regard to our acquisition of the Philippine Islands or of our rights in those islands. I take those rights to be settled, and I have no desire at this time and in connection with this bill to enter into questions which have been very much discussed hitherto in the Senate and which will be undoubtedly very much discussed in the future. My purpose this afternoon is simply to state as briefly as possible the reasons for this bill and the urgent character of the legislation which it embodies.

As is well known to the Senate, those islands have been governed by us through officers appointed by the President of the United States; first, by officers of the Army in the exercise of the war power, later by civil officers and under the provisions of what was known as the Spooner amendment, adopted at the last session of Congress.

Since that time the Supreme Court has rendered certain decisions, familiar to all Senators, in regard to our constitutional relations to those islands. Under those decisions, which hold the islands to be domestic territory of the United States, the tariff duties imposed by the United States up to this time upon articles coming from those islands have fallen. There are at this moment coming from those islands have fallen. There are at this moment no duties, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, to be col-lected on the products of the Philippine Islands. There is also some well-founded doubt as to whether the tariff adopted in the islands themselves will stand without further legislation by Congress. There is no question about the power of islation by Congress. There is no question about the power of Congress under the decisions of the Supreme Court to legislate for those islands as it may deem best, but whether the tariff imposed there for the purposes of revenue would stand without fur-ther action by Congress is a point, I think, still doubtful. Also, under the decision of the Supreme Court in what is known as the Porto Rican pilotage case, the coastwise laws of the United States are applicable and now apply not only to our commerce with the Philippine Islands but to the interisland commerce as well. At this moment there are no vessels engaged in that trade, either between the Philippines and the United States or between the different islands, which can lawfully engage in coastwise traffic of the United States. If some provision is not made by Congress, at any moment the entire traffic of those islands among themselves and with the United States may be closed. these circumstances, which create a chaotic condition there, the need of immediate legislation is very apparent.

Acting upon these views, the House of Representatives passed the bill which is now before us, and sent it to the Senate before the holiday recess of Congress. The Committee on the Philippines has had the House bill under consideration since that time, and yesterday authorized me to report it with certain amendments, which are printed in the copies of the bill now before the Senate.

The first section of the House bill has been reported to the Senate without change. That section provides for confirming and giving legal authority and force to the tariff upon goods imported into the Philippines from any country, including the United States, which has been established by the Philippine Commission.

When we took possession of the Philippine Islands we found the people there living under the Spanish tariff. Modifications were made in that tariff during the military government of the islands, and thus was made what may be called the military tariff. That has been superseded in turn by the tariff now in force.

The present tariff has been made with very great care. months were passed in the work by the Commission, who held public hearings to which were admitted inhabitants of the islands and persons engaged in trade and industry there; and after full and thorough hearing, such as a committee of the Senate or the House would give in the revision of the tariff here, a tariff was agreed upon.

The tariff was then sent to this country. The War Department had it printed, gave it wide circulation, called attention to it through the newspaper press, received a great many letters and suggestions in regard to the provisions from persons in this country connected with the Philippine Islands and interested in its trade, proposed certain changes, and sent it back with those changes to the Philippine Commission. The Philippine Commission adopted the changes proposed by the War Department, made some further slight supplemental changes itself, and then enacted the tariff and put it into force in the islands.

So far as I am aware or can learn, the tariff has been prepared with the utmost care, has been well received, and works well. It was obvious to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, as it was obvious to the Committee on the Philippines of the Senate, that we could not hope to improve upon this tariff or enter upon a revision of it without involving a very long delay, which would be extremely prejudicial to the islands while the law there remained in its present unsettled condition. Both the committees of the House and Senate therefore adopted the tariff of the Commission as it stood, recognizing in the title of the bill that the act was temporary and that the tariff thus established was of course open to change and amendment on the part of the Congress of the United States whenever reasons should be shown that changes were necessary.

In regard to the general question of a tariff upon articles imported into the Philippine Islands, assuming that all are agreed that if there is to be a tariff now that of the Commission must be accepted, on that general question I say there arises differences of opinion. It has been suggested that in the duties imposed in the Philippine Islands upon articles imported there a discrimination should be made in favor of articles the growth and product of the United States. The objection to that seemed to your committee and seems to me to be fatal and conclusive.

If we discriminate in our own favor upon articles entering the Philippine Islands from the United States, we, in the first place, seriously diminish the principal source of revenue of those islands. In the second place, we must, under Article IV of the treaty of Paris, give Spain the same discrimination that we give to our selves, which would lead, as anyone will readily appreciate, to very great and serious complications.

But the third objection, Mr. President, is far broader and more fatal than either of those I have mentioned, although both are serious. If we discriminate in the Philippine tariff in favor of our own products, we at once break down the policy of 'the open door.' "The open door," as I understand it, is a tariff which treats all nations without discrimination. We stood forward in China in the late troubles in that country, and in the negotiations which followed, as advocates of the principle of "the open door" which followed, as advocates of the principle of "the open door" to the markets of that great country. We took the ground that, while it was the undoubted privilege and right of the Chinese to apply any duties upon foreign imports which they saw fit, those duties should be the same toward all nations. By our firmness, and by a diplomacy which I think has seldom, if ever, been surpassed in our history, we succeeded in securing that principle for the present at least, and I hope for many years to come.

Now the market of China is of very great importance to all sections of this country as the largest and most promising field in the East for our exports. The strength of our position at Pekin and in the negotiations was that we could point to our own east-ern possessions and say that there we maintained the same principle which we demanded in China. If now we discriminate in our own favor upon articles the growth and product of the United States, we at once abandon that position which we have so strongly advocated and which has given us such an advantage.

Personally, I believe that the market of the Philippines is going to be, within a comparatively short time, one of great value to the people of the United States, but under no possible increase could it be equal in value to the market of China and to other markets in the Orient, where it is for our interest to maintain "the open door" and the nondiscriminating system. Therefore, "the open door" and the nondiscriminating system. Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me, looking at this question in the broadest way, in the interest of American commerce and American industry, that the maintenance of a nondiscriminating tariff. in the Philippine Islands upon all articles entering those islands is essential.

The other proposition is that made by the minority, to remove the tariff entirely. If that is done as to all nations, the principle of "the open door" is, of course, maintained, but if we overthrow of "the open door" is, of course, maintained, but if we overthrow the tariff of the Philippine Islands we wipe out their revenue entirely. The principle of "the open door," I repeat, is maintained, of course, if we give free trade to all of the world. If we do not give free trade to all the world, however, the principle of "the open door" is destroyed, and this applies to the proposition of the minority, as I understand it, which gives free entry to the Philippines only to articles the growth and product of the United

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at that point for information?

Mr. LODGE. With great pleasure.

Mr. PETTUS. It is as to "the open-door" policy. Does the Senator understand that "the open door" applies to a nation dealing with its own territory?

Mr. LODGE. I will answer the Senator by saying that I understand that, if desirable, as I believe it to be eminently desirable in this case it can certainly be applied by the country in present in this case, it can certainly be applied by the country in possession. If we adopt free trade for articles from the United States, as I understand it is proposed by the report of the minority, we introduce a broad discrimination in our own favor. If, in order to have free trade between the islands and the United States and yet preserve "the open-door" policy, we give free trade to all the world and impose no duties on any articles, we then destroy nearly all the revenue of the islands.

Those islands have been accustomed for many years to raising the bulk of their revenue by import duties. It is hardly necessary for me to enlarge upon the proposition that nothing is calculated to make more trouble and to cause more dissatisfaction and ill feeling than suddenly to alter the habitual system of taxation for raising the revenue in any community. If we sweep away the revenue derived from customs tariffs in the Philippines, we shall be obliged to replace it by direct taxation in those islands, and that, I think, is an experiment which we ought not to enter upon; certainly not at this time. Therefore it seems to me that in order to continue to the Philippines their necessary revenue, raised in the manner to which they are accustomed, and to maintain "the open door" in the East which we have advocated in China, we ought to maintain the tariff as it now stands and make it the same to all nations of the earth, including ourselves. That was the view of the House of Representatives, and in that view the Senate committee has concurred by reporting the House provision without change.

The second section of the House bill provided for the reestablishment of the Dingley rates, which had been swept away by the decision of the Supreme Court. The House reestablished those rates without any reduction or diminution in any way. Your committee felt, after giving most careful consideration to the subject, that some reduction in those duties to the people of the Philippine Islands was both just and wise. The Philippine Commission had recommended a reduction of 50 per cent. Your commission had recommended a reduction of 50 per cent. Your committee felt that 25 per cent, in view of the experimental character of the bill and of our present tariff relations with the islands, of the bill and of our present tarin relations with the islands, was as far as it was wise or safe to go at the present time. They increased the reduction somewhat, as I shall presently explain, by deducting the export duties from the reduced Dingley rates, but they were of the opinion that 25 per cent, as an absolute reduction in the rates, was enough. The case is different from that of Porto Rico, because there we received their markets in return for our own; but no discrimination of any kind is given to us or asked by us in the Philippines.

It is well also to remember in this connection that almost all the duties collected in this country upon Philippine products are collected on sugar. The reduction, therefore, goes almost entirely to the benefit of a single industry in the islands, whereas whatever we retain of the duties collected here at our Pacific or whatever we retain of the duties collected here at our Facinc or other ports is paid into the Philippine treasury and goes back to the islands for the benefit not merely of those engaged in the sugar industry, but of all the people of all the islands.

I now come to the export duties. It has been the practice, I think, in all countries governed by Spain, Spainish-American countries, and all countries governed by Spain, Spainish-American countries.

think, in all countries governed by Spain, Spainsi-American countries and elsewhere, instead of imposing a direct tax upon land for the support of the General Government, to be distinguished, of course, from local taxation—it has been the custom, I say, to raise that money by imposing the tax upon the product of the land at the time of exportation. That had been the long-established practice in the Philippine Islands, but when this present tariff was made the export duties were revised, as were the import du-The number of articles subject to export tax was reduced and the export duties imposed were retained on others, and in some cases increased. The articles subject to export tax in the Philip *pines to-day under the Commission's tariff are abaca—i. e., hemp—indigo, indigo employed for dyeing, rice, sugar, cocoanuts, fresh and dried (copra), and tobacco, which bears a different rate of export duty according to its place of origin in the islands. Some of these articles pay a duty on entering the United States and others come in free. and others come in free some of these articles pay a duty on entering the United States and others come in free.

The hemp is classified upon importation into the United States under the head of "Fibers and grasses," and comes in under that head as "manila" free of duty. Both kinds of indigo come in free; copra comes in free. Rice, sugar, and tobacco, which are subject to the export duties, all pay duties. The Senate committee amendment provides that the rates of duty which are levied and collected in the ports of the United States on the products of the Philippines shall be less any duty or tax levied, collected, or paid thereon upon the exportation thereof from the Philippine Archipelago; that is, the growers of rice, sugar, and tobacco are relieved from their export duty by having it deducted from the duties imposed at the ports of the United States.

Rice, I may say, is not a subject of exportation from the Philippines. On the contrary, they do not grow enough there for their own consumption, but import large quantities, chiefly from China. Sugar and tobacco are the two articles dutiable here and paying an export duty there which will benefit by the deduction of the export duty from the reduced Dingley rates. That would raise the reduction on sugar, the principal import, to the neighborhood of 35 per cent. It is not easy to calculate the exact reduction on sugar, owing to the different grades of test under which the duties on sugar are collected; but it is near enough to say that it is in the neighborhood of 35 per cent—that is, that the 25 per cent deduction plus the deduction of the export duty. say that it is in the neighborhood of 35 per cent—that is, that the 25 per cent deduction, plus the deduction of the export duty, makes the total reduction on sugar about 35 per cent.

There then remain the articles paying export duties which come into this country free. They can not be relieved of the export duty by making a reduction in the duties here, because there are none. Your committee was at first disposed to leave it in that way, but there seemed to be no escape from the argument that it was not fair to relieve one class of exporters and not another; that if we took off the export duty from the raisers of sugar and tobacco, no matter in what form the relief was given, it was only fair to give a similar relief to those who grew hemp or indigo or copra. Therefore we have provided in this amendment that articles entering the United States and now admitted to the United States free of duty shall be exempt from export duties levied in the Phil-

It is to be remembered in dealing with these export duties that we now impose those export duties as well as those rates which we impose at the ports of entry in the United States. If the removal of the export duties affected the principle of "the open door," I for one should be disposed to oppose it, but of course it has no bearing on that at all, because "the open door" applies only to the nondiscriminating tariff on goods imported.

It also is not touched by our treaty agreements with Spain. We agreed with Spain that her ships and her merchandise should be admitted on the same terms as our own to the Philippine Islands. The export duties are left wholly at our disposition. The amount of the reduction upon those export duties in the revenue of the Philippine Islands can be found by looking at the amount raised on those exported to the United States. The export duties or indiges are retriefling but the export duties or indiges. port duties on indigo or copra are trifling, but the export duty collected on hemp is very large.

The total export duties collected in the Philippine Islands in the last fiscal year were $671,000, and the total revenue derived from customs was about nine and a half millions, which included the export duty. The amount of export duty collected on hemp was in that year $483,000 of the $671,000. Of that amount, $80,000 was collected on hemp exported to the United States. Therefore, by reliaving the hamp growers of the Philippine Islands of the was collected on hemp exported to the United States. Therefore, by relieving the hemp growers of the Philippine Islands of the export duty on hemp exported to the United States we take away $80,000 of the revenue which they now have in the treasury of the Philippine Islands. But it is to be remembered that we return to them now, for the first time, all the duties collected in this country on articles coming from the Philippines, which, judging from past years, will be about $400,000. So, if we take $80,000 out of their revenue in the islands, we return to them four times as much from the duties collected in the United States on Philippine products.

on Philippine products.

That this change will be to the advantage of the hemp growers of the Philippine Islands can not be doubted; that it will be to the advantage of the people of the United States seems to me to be equally beyond question. The policy of the United States has been to admit manila hemp free into its ports, because it is the best hemp in the world and is largely used in cordage of all kinds, including binding thing the best of the product of the product of the united States has been to admit manila hemp free into its ports, because it is the best hemp in the world and is largely used in cordage of all kinds, including binding the product of including binding twine, which has so great a consumption among the agricultural population of the United States. This, of course, would bring manila hemp into the United States at a lower price than it has ever come before. It would also bring it on a level with the Tampico and other grasses and fibers included in the same schedule in the tariff; whereas if we leave the export duties which we ourselves impose on this article coming into the United States, we put the hemp grown in our own territory at a disadvantage with the fibers and grasses used for similar purposes and grown in other countries.

The whole purpose of the reduction of the export duty, and the main argument to my mind, was that we ought to put the Philippine products on a parity, to begin with, with similar articles imported from foreign countries. We do this by deducting the export duty from the rates of duty here. We do not do it in regard to hemp, which is their greatest product, if we leave the export duty on. Of course all Philippine articles get the reduction of 25 per cent; but apart from that, I think they are all entitled to come in on a parity with similar articles from other countries.

Mr. SPOONER. Will it disturb the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. Not at all

Not at all.

Mr. SPOONER. As I understand it, the export tax on hemp under the local Philippine tariff is $7.50 a ton.

Mr. LODGE. I understand it makes about $7.50 a long ton.

Mr. SPOONER. Under this bill as amended that tax of $7.50

Mr. SPOONER. Under this bill as amended that tax of $7.50 will be imposed upon all hemp exported from the Philippine Archipelago to any other country than the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no tax imposed upon it when it comes from the Philippines into the United States?

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. SPOONER. Will that not have the effect of bringing all that Philippine hemp to the United States, and therefore deprive the Philippine government of practically the entire export tax on hemp? tax on hemp?

Mr. LODGE. The committee, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin, considered that question, which is a very important one. The removal of the export duty is limited to hemp exported Mr. LODGE. to the United States for use and consumption in the United

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. And that of course must be guarded by rules and regulations prescribed by the Treasury Department. It may be possible that we can add a clause here which will guard it sufficiently, but it seemed to me that it was better to leave a matter like that, as we usually do leave matters of that sort in the tariff, to the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, what I had in mind was whether the estimate of the Senator or of the committee that this chappe in the bill eliminating the export ax on hemp tee that this change in the bill eliminating the export tax on hemp which came from the Philippines into the United States would not result in a loss of local revenue of more than $80,000. In other words, will not the fact that hemp exported from the Philippines to any other country than the United States will be subject to this tax of $7.50 a ton, while it is subject to no tax if it comes to this country, lead to such an exportation of hemp to the United States as to practically deprive the Philippine government of this export tor?

Onted States as to practically deprive the Philippine government of this export tax?

Mr. LODGE. That was the point I was trying to meet, for I thought I understood what the Senator's point was. He thinks there is a danger of deflecting all the hemp for all the world to the United States and that it would come in here practically free and then be reexported; that is, that portion which we did not use would be reexported to other countries.

Mr. SPOONER. Ought not that to be guarded against?

Mr. LODGE. That is what I said I thought the amendment did

Mr. SPOONER. Ought not that to be guarded against?
Mr. LODGE. That is what I said I thought the amendment did guard against, but if it does not, I would be only too happy to accept any suggestions which would do so, because it would be a very unfortunate thing if it had that effect.
Mr. FORAKER. Would not that same danger arise as to every other export from the Philippine Islands as to which the export duty is taken off by this provision? There would certainly be just the same liability to send to this country, if that would be a sufficient reason for deflecting it, all the tobacco and all the sugar and everything else from which the export duty would be taken. everything else from which the export duty would be taken.
Mr. LODGE. Yes; it would apply, I suppose.
Mr. SPOONER. How about indigo?

Mr. LODGE. Indigo is a very small matter. I mean it is not a practical question.

Mr. FORAKER. In other words, it is merely a matter of specu-

Mr. LODGE. I do not see how it could be deflected if the law is properly enforced. As to the details of enforcing it, I think that would have to be left to the regulations of the Treasury, but if any clause can be devised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr.

Any clause can be devised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] or by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison], who has perhaps had a larger experience in tariff bills than anybody else, I should be only too glad to have it added to the bill.

Mr. HALE. Was it not in the contemplation of the committee which discussed the very question raised by the Senator from Wisconsin that when there was embodied the phrase "for consumption in the United States," the ample powers of the Treasury Department in the way of regulation would at once be sufficient to protect this product from the Philippine Islands from cient to protect this product from the Philippine Islands from being sent here and in a roundabout way going to another country; that the phrase "for consumption in the United States" leaves all else to the Treasury Department by regulation, so that we should not be an intermediate point? I think that was the understanding of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. That was the understanding of the committee,

Mr. LODGE. That was the understanding of the committee, certainly.

Now, Mr. President, only a word in conclusion on these two sections in regard to the general state of trade. The imports of the United States into the Philippine Islands have been increasing, showing that certainly the tariff imposed there, which we bear in common with other countries, has not been operating unfavorably to us. Exports to this country from the Philippines have been decreasing somewhat, and all of the reductions made by the committee tend to improve exportations to this country from the Phil mittee tend to improve exportations to this country from the Philippine Islands, and, I think, are very wise on that account as well as on others which I have tried to describe.

The state of trade in the Philippine Islands is prosperous. I will not, in support of that statement, draw any evidence from any American source, but I will ask to have printed, after reading, a circular which has been sent out to the German press and business circles by the German Government. In that circular the German Government says:

Although the pacification of the Philippine Archipelago has not as yet been fully established, the accounts of its economic development are so favorable that it can not be too strongly urged upon German exporters to give particular attention to this group of islands. From July, 1900, to March, 1901, the exports have increased by 34 per cent and the imports by 52 per cent, as compared with those of the same period of the preceding year. The testimony can not be withheld that the American administration of the affairs of the Philippines has, as far as the economical betterment of the country is concerned, already achieved extraordinary success.

In 1894, which was the last year of peaceful condition while under Spanish rule, the Philippine imports reached $28,500,000 and the exports $33,100,000 Mexican in value.

Under American rule, in spite of the continued insurrection of the natives, the imports increased in 1899 to $40,900,000 and in 1900 to $55,500,000 Mexican and the exports to $38,500,000 and $53,400,000, respectively. Military supplies are not included in these figures.

The detailed statistics show that Spanish trade with these islands is rapidly diminishing, while commercial relations with the United States are gaining. For German interests it is essential to know whether imports from the United States will receive preferential treatment. Spain gave her products on importation into her colonies preferential rates. The United States hitherto has abstained from following this precedent. It is noteworthy that the tariff schedule proposed by the United States Commission in Manila retains the present feature of equal rates on all importations, whether from the United States or other countries.

United States or other countries.

That is embodied in a report from our deputy consul-general at Frankfort, and I shall ask to have it printed with my remarks. I think it shows that our economic policy in the Philippine Islands has so far been successful, and, laying aside other questions, much mooted questions, that in making these reductions on articles coming from the Philippines into the United States we are stimulating the trade with the United States at the point where stimulation is needed; that we are already gaining in imports into the Philippine Islands, and we are ready to lay aside ports into the Philippine Islands, and we are ready to lay aside the hope of monopolizing the trade of the islands themselves, because we are anxious to maintain the larger policy of the open

The third section of this bill relates to tonnage and coastwise As I said at the opening, under the Porto Rican pilotage case, the Philippine Islands being domestic territory, the coast-wise laws apply. But there are no vessels operating in the islands or between the islands and the United States which can lawfully engage in the coastwise traffic. It therefore became absolutely necessary, by a temporary enactment, to relieve those islands from the coastwise laws of the United States. Otherwise we should simply paralyze all trade among the islands and all trade between the islands and the United States.

Also it became necessary, if we were going to open the trade— Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question?
Mr. LODGE. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. Under what authority are vessels not now under American registry used in the prosecution of that trade?
Mr. LODGE. They are under no authority. All trade that is going on there to-day, conducted by foreign vessels, is of necessity unlawful, if anybody chooses to raise the point and bring it to an issue

Mr. BACON. There has, however, been a formal order from the authorities of the War Department authorizing it, has there not?

Mr. LODGE. Of that I am not informed.
Mr. BACON. Has not the Senator seen the statement in the public prints that the War Department has issued an order authorizing those vessels not under American registry to engage in that trade?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is right. Yes; I have seen it. I re-ember it now. I did not remember it at the time the Senator member it now. asked the question.

Mr. BACON. I should like to hear from the Senator, who is chairman of the committee, what he thinks as to the authority and power of the War Department to issue any such order.

Mr. LODGE. I think this: Here was an exigency where, if, under the decision of the Supreme Court, they had rigidly enforced the law, they would have stopped all trade between those islands; the law, they would have stopped all trade between those islands; they would have absolutely wrecked all business and stopped all commerce between the islands. No greater blow could have been inflicted. It would have been sufficiently trying and embarrassing to stop the trade between the Philippines and the United States, but to stop all that local interisland commerce, when the Department was well informed that Congress, as rapidly as possible, was trying to meet the exigency, it seems to me would have been a cruel and useless thing to do. Undoubtedly the Department, knowing perfectly well that it was going beyond the law, took the responsibility wisely and bravely, and trusted that Congress in its wisdom and good sense would give them support, if necessary, for what had been done and would affirm their act.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I do not wish to enter into any discussion of the question he raises as to the propriety of the action. I simply asked as to the authority. But if priety of the action. I simply asked as to the authority. But if he will pardon me I should like to make this application: If the exigency as it has heretofore existed warranted it, the continuance of the exigency will also warrant it, and the great emergency to which the Senator alluded in his opening remarks does not exist.

Mr. LODGE. I think it does exist, and for the very reason that the Secretary has been obliged and the Philippine Commission have been obliged to accede to the conduct of commerce which they know to be going on illegally. It is not a wholesome condition. I do not see how anyone can suggest that it is a wholesome condition. We have to get ready—

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. At the date of the decision of the Supreme Court there were all along the Pacific coast any number of foreign vessels loaded, ready to depart, and the Department simply permitted them to clear until such time as the matter could be remedied here.

Mr. BACON. Of course; we understand that.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] suggests rto Rico the same thing was done. I believe that Mr. LODGE. to me that in Porto Rico the same thing was done. I believe that is true. But opening our Philippine trade to foreign commerce it became necessary, of course, to impose the same tonnage dues which are now imposed on all foreign vessels coming into the United States. That has been done by the first clause in the bill. All that the Senate has done is to extend the House provision for raising tonnage dues on foreign vessels trading between the Philippines and the United States to foreign vessels engaged in interisland commerce. That is, it puts them all on the same plane, and of course it necessarily gives to any American vessels entering the trade an advantage which they ought to have, for it is greatly to our interest to have the interisland trade pass into American hands at the earliest moment. I am told there are now on the way to the Philippine Islands, intending to take part in that trade, 19 small vessels built in the United States.

The remaining sections of the bill provide for making drawbacks of the internal-revenue taxes, or of duties levied on any backs of the internal-revenue taxes, or of duties levied on any materials which are in articles sent to the Philippine Islands. That is, it is relieving our own producer from paying internal-revenue taxes on an article of export to the Philippine Islands, where he is met by a tariff. As I say, the remaining sections provide for that, and they also provide the necessary administrative sections for carrying out these provisions in regard to drawbacks which have been suggested by the Treasury Department of

Now, Mr. President, that is the bill. It is intended, as its titledeclares, for the temporary establishment of these new tariffs. We shall then have abundant time to gather information as to any changes that may be needed and to adapt the navigation laws any changes that may be needed and to adapt the navigation laws to new circumstances as new circumstances may arise. That seems to me to be the only wise way to deal with the existing situation, and beyond the existing situation I have no desire to go.

The minority of the committee have offered a substitute for the House bill which the majority of the committee has reported with amendments. The minority substitute thunders loudly in the index about granting independence and treating the Philippine Islands as a foreign country, but when we turn the page rethe index about granting independence and treating the Philippine Islands as a foreign country, but when we turn the page we find that the solution of the Philippine question is all subordinated to the hard fact that the United States must continue to occupy and govern that archipelago for the present, at least, and until a stable government is formed—a very vague date.

Now, the minority and the majority agree that we must deal with the islands for the present, at least. The minority propose to sweep away all tariffs between the islands and the United States and to appropriate them to leave us by proprising that when

States and to encourage them to leave us by promising that when they do leave us we shall reimpose all the duties that we can against their products—a strange inducement to offer for separation. The minority also make large promises as to the future.

Mr. President, I hold an entirely open mind as to what we shall do in the Philippines next year or next month. I hold an entirely open mind not only as to our legislative arrangements in those islands and the provisions we shall make for the government of them while that government rests in our hands, but as ment of them while that government rests in our hands, but as to the relations which we shall maintain with them in the present, in the immediate future, or ultimately. But there is one thing to which I will never willingly give my vote if I can possibly avoid it. I will never put into a bill for the Philippine Islands a legislative promise, vague, uncertain, perhaps impossible of fulfillment. I will never take part in raising hopes in the breasts of any people which they can easily misinterpret and which it might be impossible for us to fulfill. There seems to me but one fair and intelligent way of dealing with the islands, and that is to deal with them as they are now; to deal with all questions as they arise. When they are ready to take the government of the islands into their own hands, we shall know it, and we can then turn the islands over to them. But let us keep clear of vague words and still vaguer promises. Let us do all that we can to advance the prosperity of the Filipinos—to educate them, to improve them, and to uplift them; but do not let us make promises to them about a future as to which neither we nor they can tell.

Let us deal with the questions of the day as they arise, one after another. Then, indeed, it will be difficult enough, trying to the utmost the best statesmanship and the most honest purposes that this country can produce. But do not let us enter upon a plan of offering to them fine words and loose language and specious promises, which deceive them and deceive us and deceives the what we have the what we make you may not be what whole world; which may be what we mean or may not be what we mean; which convey no assurance to anyone as to what the future will really bring.

I believe this bill to be a wise and sensible method of dealing with the existing question. If the next six months shall produce to us a wiser and better, I shall be happy to join in it. But whatever we do, whether we give them free trade, as the minority propose, or a tariff such as we propose, let us give it to them without a promise; let us do what we have to do as we stand, and not attempt to put mortgages upon an unknown future.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the measure approved by the majority of the Committee on the Philippines is supposed to be rendered necessary by the recent decisions of the Supreme Court, holding that by the treaty with Spain the Philippines became part of the United States and ceased to be foreign territory, and that goods imported therefrom into the United States, or entering the islands from the United States, are not subject to the payment of tariff duties until Congress should otherwise provide and that it tariff duties until Congress should otherwise provide, and that it is competent for Congress to make any disposition of the islands is competent for Congress to make any disposition of the islands which it may deem proper.

The bill proposed by the majority in its first section reenacts or continues in force the tariff act, so called, passed by the Philippine Commission, fixing certain duties to be collected upon goods entering the Philippine Archipelago. At present such goods from other countries are subject to the payment of the duties prescribed by our general tariff act, generally known as the Dingley tariff law, unless the tariff act of the Taft Commission is held to supersede it.

Whereas now, under the decision of the Supreme Court, no

Whereas now, under the decision of the Supreme Court, no duties can be collected upon goods entering the islands from the United States or entering the United States from the islands, the second section of the bill proposed by the majority provides that the same tariffs, customs, and duties (less 25 per cent) shall be paid upon all articles, the growth of the islands, coming into the United States from the islands which are required to be paid upon articles imported from foreign countries. articles imported from foreign countries

These two provisions proceed upon the theory that in respect of tariff taxation it is unsafe to treat the islands otherwise than as

This measure is not necessary to provide revenue for the islands. As already pointed out by the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, the proportion of the trade of the United States with the islands in comparison with that of the total trade of the islands is insignificant, and the revenue derived from that trade will not exceed $400,000 per annum. We are informed by the will not exceed $400,000 per annum. We are informed by the report of the Taft Commission that they have an abundance of report of the Taft Commission that they have an abundance of revenue at present, and that there is a surplus in the treasury of more than $5,000,000. So there is no urgency in respect to the passage of this measure as proposed by the majority of the committee, so far as concerns providing revenues to defray the expenses of the government in the Philippine Islands.

Section 3 of the proposed bill denies to the islands the benefit of any of the statutory laws of the United States relating to shipping, and in that respect treats the islands as foreign territory.

These provisions put the islands outside the domain of general national legislation, as they have also been denied the benefits or protection of our Constitution.

Section 4 directs as to the disposition of the moneys derived from

Section 4 directs as to the disposition of the moneys derived from tariff taxation under the preceding clauses. It will thus be seen that the majority of the committee deem it unsafe in any respect to treat the islands or their people as if an integral part of the United States. They fear that free trade and intercourse with the islands and the competition of their industries will be destructive of the welfare of the people of this country. They recognize that, as to the government of the islands, a total destructive of the state of the country. recognize that, as to the government of the Islands, a total departure must be made from the policy of the Government which has hitherto prevailed. The majority, however, cling to the idea that we must retain the islands, exact allegiance of their people, and coerce their submission to our authority, while we deny to them the protection of our Constitution and the equal benefit of our laws; tax them without representation; dispose of the moneys thus derived without regard to their wishes, and govern them by methods of despotism, against their protest and without their conmethods of despotism, against their protest and without their consent. That is the purpose of the measure which is now presented to the Senate for its consideration.

It must be plain to the reasonable mind that the measure proposed by the majority will not tend to promote peace and the reestablishment of order in the archipelago. These people, when they understand the purport of this measure, will find in these provisions a realization of their worst fears, that they were to be made the subjects of despotic rule and the victims of remorseless

It is not difficult to foresee the results of the policy proposed by the majority. The tragic struggle in the islands will continue. There will be war, insurrection, brigandage, robbery, and assassi-nation. Except where under the perfect protection of military power, there will be no safety to life or security for property. Industry and trade will be paralyzed. Without other weapons, the people there, in their deep resentment and desire to wreak revenge, may resort to stealth and treachery. The people of offending localities may be, as according to reports they have been, rounded up for extermination. The waste of blood and treasure will continue. The horror of the situation, now indescribable, will, if possible, grow more aggravated.

It may be observed that we have embarked on a dual, if not

It may be observed that we have embarked on a dual, if not inconsistent, form of despotic rule to be applied to the islands—one a military rule, the other the irresponsible, autocratic rule of the Philippine Commission. There is no definition of the boundary between the two. Perhaps the one is designed to hold the people in submission while their exploitation is conducted by the other.

It will doubtless be contended that our philanthropic desire for the welfare of the islands is displayed in section 4. The Philippine Commission desire to have at their disposal large sums of money for expenditure. There is no limit to their power of multiplying offices and employments, fixing the tenure of the offices, and the amount of the salaries, compensation, perquisites, and incidentals. They are far removed from the critical and censuring gaze of the free American people. They owe no duty and have no responsibility to the helpless people among whom they operate.

None of the swarms of officers or emissaries whom we send hither, from the highest to the lowest, expect permanently to establish their homes there. Their sojourn is to be temporary. Their chief interest or center of desire is their return with replenished fortunes, to live in the affluence derived from foreign exploitation. Such has been the history of like rule at all times, and among all classes and races of people. It is one of the necessary results of carrying out an imperial programme.

Look at the conduct of our agents in Cuba, stealing the trust funds committed to their care. Examine the proceedings of even our judges, marshals, and other officials in far distant Alaska. It seems impossible to administer an Indian reservation within our borders with honesty. Conspiracies to commit a larceny of their wealth even there seem to become predominant.

The policy outlined by the majority proposes the permanent institution of the practice of tyranny. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] has said that this measure is but temporary, but he declines to give any promise as to what the policy of the majority will be in the future. He disclaims any forecast which will enable him to say what he will do next month or next year or ten years hence. For three years we have been thus drifting, and still the Senator rises here and says that the future is shrouded in darkness, if not in despair. Mr. President, it is time for wise foresight in the administration of the affairs of this Government to see the trend and endeavor to provide for the welfare of the country.

I say the policy outlined by the majority proposes the permanent institution of the practice of tyranny. No principle can be more vicious than that which underlies the very measure which is now presented to the consideration of the Senate. It involves the very thing which led to the struggle for the establishment of this free Republic. It is about the question of taxation that all the great revolutions in history have been waged and about which they have been conducted. By reason of the opportunities offered to its agents for enriching themselves the practice will grow more and more attractive, until finally it will be insisted that its operation is not only necessary abroad, but will be beneficent at home. It is difficult to see how the Republic can long survive the operation of a policy so pernicious.

Heretofore we have heard much about the value of our trade with the islands and the open door to the East; and the Senator who has just addressed you has elaborated upon the promise which that holds forth to the people of this country. The object of the measure proposed by the majority is to obstruct and destroy this trade by placing embargoes upon it. They do not regard it as beneficial, but dangerous. The title that it is temporarily to provide revenue is a subterfuge.

They see in it a menace and peril to our prosperity. They are undertaking to provide that the United States, in relation to that trade, shall stand upon the same footing as all other countries. It follows that the retention of the islands by the United States, if we look only to the matter of profit making, puts the people of this country at a great disadvantage.

if we look only to the matter of profit making, puts the people of this country at a great disadvantage.

By our methods of government we incite the inhabitants to hostility and insurrection. We are compelled to increase the extent and cost of our military establishment and sacrifice the lives of our soldiers. To maintain a given strength upon the sea our naval expenditures must be augmented. We can only keep the inhabitants of the islands in subjection by force. The following table, taken from the report of the Auditor for the War Department, discloses the increased cost of the military establishment by reason of the retention of the islands.

	Number of accounts settled.	Amounts in- volved in ac- counts set- tled.

The annual expenditure during the year of the Spanish war was, in round numbers, $85,000,000. The annual expenditure for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1901, was $120,000,000, multiplying the ordinary expenditures upon a peace footing five times from 1897 to the end of the fiscal year 1901.

It must be evident that our army in the Philippines is inadequate for the protection of life and property. By force we have compelled many of the inhabitants to take the oath of allegiance to the United States, and the Philippine Commission would undertake to impose upon some of these the responsibilities of government.

So great is the ill will of these people toward us that those who have declared their adherence to the United States, being regarded by the patriots as traitors, are marked for punishment. Many of these "friends" have been assassinated, others have been buried alive, our army being inadequate to afford them protection.

This army has been assigned to the performance of certain duties in the islands and has performed them, no doubt, with the highest degree of energy and efficiency, but reports from the islands reveal what seems to me an appalling situation. The almost universal sentiment among the native inhabitants is in favor of their independence. For various reasons they feel extreme hostility to the Government of the United States. In their own estimation they are patriots and struggling in a holy cause. It is most natural that all the inhabitants feel in sympathy with their compatriots in arms. Their every honest impulse would be to render aid in this cause.

Those in command of the army found that ordinary methods of carrying on the warfare were without result. Accordingly they decided upon a more drastic programme. An order was promulgated substantially to the effect that all who rendered sympathy or aid to the insurgents, whether voluntarily or under dures, would be regarded as traitors and subject to the extreme penalty of military law. Such of the native inhabitants as might desire to go along in peace found themselves in danger of being ground to pieces between the upper and nether millstone. If they acknowledged allegiance to the United States, they were marked for punishment by their former compatriots. If they rendered aid to the insurgents, they were liable to be shot by the soldiers of the United States.

A plan was devised by finesse and kidnaping to capture Aguinaldo. This was adroitly and successfully executed. Aguinaldo became a prisoner. While thus in duress, after days of persuasive influence, he was induced to take the oath of allegiance to the United States and to advise his people to surrender their arms and do likewise. Shortly afterwards some American soldiers were taken prisoners by the insurgents. Under threats of the direst punishment they were induced to declare for the insurgent cause and to advise American soldiers to desert and join with the insurgent army. When these soldiers succeeded in escaping, they were arrested, tried, and sentenced to be shot. It is true General Chaffee, out of compassion, reversed the sentence, but declared that technically they were liable to the extreme penalty; that no person connected with the Army of the United States, under threats of extreme punishment, ought to recognize allegiance to the enemy, and that such conduct amounted to treachery. If Aguinaldo, therefore, shall fall again into the hands of the insurgents, they will only have to adopt the reasoning of General Chaffee to subject him to the penalty of death for what we, under compulsion, have induced him to do.

On the 8th day of December last Brigadier-General Bell issued instructions to the station commanders to the effect that all the native inhabitants were to be presumed as traitors and secret enemies of the United States until by acts it was proved to the contrary. He further said:

A general conviction, which the brigade commander shares, appears to exist that the insurrection in this brigade continues because the greater part of the people, especially the wealthy ones, pretend to desire but in reality do not want peace. That when all really want peace we can have it promptly. Under such circumstances it is clearly indicated that a policy should be adopted that will, as soon as possible, make the people want peace, and want it badly.

At the same time he issued an order to the station commanders that the people inhabiting barrios and country in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna should, by the 25th of the same month, be gathered into the garrisoned towns. In the same order he employed this language:

Commanding officers will also see that orders are at once given and distributed to all the inhabitants within the jurisdiction of towns over which they exercise supervision, informing them of the danger of remaining outside of these limits, and that unless they move by December 25 from outlying barrios and districts, with all their movable food supplies, including rice, palay, chickens, live stock, etc., to within the limits of the zone established at their own or nearest town, their property (found outside of said zone at said date) will become liable to confiscation or destruction.

Think of it! A people peacefully pursuing their avocations in their own country, upon their own land, compelled, within a period which would seem to render it impossible to comply with the order, to do this under penalty of being subjected to the destruction or confiscation of their property.

The people-

Mark this gracious provision in this order-

The people will be permitted to move house after they get this notice and before the 25th day of Decemberfrom outlying districts, should they desire to do so, or to construct temporary shelter for themselves on any vacant land without compensation to the owner; and no owner will be permitted to deprive them of the privilege of doing so.

Those who, within the short time elapsing from the 8th until the 25th of December, after receiving information of the order, failed to comply with it were to be dealt with as traitors or spies and their property confiscated or destroyed.

I next read some words which ought to have a familiar sound in this Chamber and which once moved this body to heroic action:

All the country people in the four western provinces, about 400,000 in number, remaining outside the fortified towns when Weyler's order was made were driven into these towns, and these are the reconcentrados. They were the peasantry, many of them farmers, some landowners, others renting lands and owning more or less stock, others working on estates and cultivating small patches—and even a small patch in that fruitful clime will support a family.

and owning more or less stock, cheers working the small patches—and even a small patch in that fruitful clime will support a family.

It is but fair to say that the normal condition of these people was very different from what prevails in this country. Their standard of comfort and prosperity was not high, measured by ours; but according to their standards and requirements their conditions of life were satisfactory.

They lived mostly in cabins made of palms, or in wooden houses. Some of them had houses of stone, the blackened walls of which are all that remain to show the country was ever inhabited.

The first clause of Weyler's order reads as follows:

"I. Order and command.—First. All the inhabitants of the country or outside of the line of fortifications of the towns shall, within the period of eight days, concentrate themselves in the towns occupied by the troops. Any individual who, after the expiration of this period, is found in the uninhabited parts, will be considered a rebel and tried as such."

The other three sections forbid the transportation of provisions from one town to another without permission of the military authority; direct the owners of cattle to bring them into the towns, prescribe that the eight days shall be counted from the publication of the proclamation in the head town of the municipal district, and state that if news is furnished of the enemy which can be made use of, it will serve as a "recommendation."

And that, too, is taken as the pattern for some instructions

And that, too, is taken as the pattern for some instructions which General Bell promulgated to the station commanders in Batangas. Many, doubtless, did not learn of this order. I wonder how many in Batangas learned of Bell's order. They can not read the English language. Very few know the Spanish language. How many ever saw it before the 25th day of December, when it was to be carried into execution?

Was to be carried into execution?

Many, doubtless, did not learn of this order. Others failed to grasp its terrible meaning. Its execution was left largely to the guerrillas to drive in all that had not obeyed, and I was informed that in many cases the torch was applied to their homes with no notice, and the inmates fled with such clothing as they might have on, their stock and other belongings being appropriated by the guerrillas. When they reached the towns they were allowed to build huts of palm leaves in the suburbs and vacant places within the trochas, and left to live, if they could.

Their huts are about 10 by 15 feet in size, and for want of space are usually crowded together very closely. They have no floor but the ground, no furniture, and, after a year's wear, but little clothing except such stray substitutes as they can extemporize; and with large families, or more than one, in this little space, the commonest sanitary provisions are impossible. Conditions are unmentionable in this respect. Torn from their homes, with foul earth, foul air, foul water, and foul food or none, what wonder that one-half have died and one-quarter of the living are so diseased that they can not be saved? A form of dropsy is a common disorder resulting from these conditions. Little children are still walking about with arms and chest terribly emaciated, eyes swollen, and abdomen bloated to three times the natural size. The physicians say these cases are hopeless.

Deaths in the streets have not been uncommon. I was told by one of our consuls that they have been found dead about the markets in the morning, where they had crawled, hoping to get some stray bits of food from the early hucksters, and that there had been cases where they had dropped dead inside the market surrounded by food. Before Weyler's order these people were independent and self-supporting. They are not beggars even now. There are plenty of professional beggars in every town among the regular residents, but these country people—the reconcentrados—have not

Will the same master hand paint the new scene of tragedy and death now being enacted across the rolling waters of the Pacific? Three bloody years have passed. Is it possible that the good angel of '98 has been so soon transformed into the demon of despotism?

It is idle to suppose that the people of the islands will forgive us or look upon us as friends. We may coerce them to submission for a time. They will nurse their wrath, however, and lay by for a favorable opportunity to wreak revenge. If we make a brief retrospect of our dealings with them, this will be made manifest to every reasonable mind.

From the point of view of the native inhabitants, what have we done? They once looked at our history as an example of what may be achieved by a people determined to be free. When the war with Spain came we hunted up their fugitive leaders. By them we were assured of the aid of their people on the basis of gaining their independence under our protection. With the gaining their independence under our protection. With the knowledge of this aspiration of the Philippine people and of their firm belief that such would be the result of their cooperation with us, we invited and accepted their aid. It involved the highest sacrifice a people can make—their peace, their fortunes, their lives. For months we permitted them to nurse this sweet delucion while they revived out their blod, as they believed in consion while they poured out their blood, as they believed, in consecration of their native soil to liberty and independence.

When, with their aid, we had triumphed—when Manila had fallen—we denied them any share in the glory of the victory. We shut the gates of their own city against them. We cast them aside. Across their native soil, moistened by the blood spilled by them in our service, we marked dead lines. We dared them to cross under penalty of death. Then we sent commissioners to true still further to delude them with continuous properties. try still further to delude them with canting phrase and hypocritical pretense. This, to the Filipino mind, was but the cowardly culmination of our career of perfidy.

were called to halt by an American sentry. It is said they did not heed the command. Two of their number were shot. The others returned to the blockhouse, and the firing began. The next day heed the command. Two of their number were shot. The others returned to the blockhouse, and the firing began. The next day the American commander sent the message: "The firing, having begun, must continue to the grim end."

Unfortunately, he proved a true prophet, and his dismal fore-cast has been more than realized. What is still in store for us in its further fulfillment is not difficult to foresee, if the policy outlined by the majority is to prevail. It is said one sixth of the native inhabitants of Luzon have perished. Devastation has swept that land. Every household is doubtless filled with sorrow. With their vision resting upon desolated homes and bereaved families, is it possible that there can be anyone having so little knowledge of human nature as to believe for an instant that these people will ever in their lives look with real friendly feeling toward the Government which has brought upon them such sorrow and ruin?

Of course we owe it to ourselves to make recompense and to atone as far as we can for the wrongs which we have committed. It is not yet too late to fulfill our pledge to accord to them their independence; it is not yet too late to allow them some outlet for their products and an opportunity to live; it is not yet too late for us to stay the hand of the carpetbagger and remove from them the peril of future exploitation; it is not yet too late for us to take the yoke of autocratic and military despotism from their necks, and, better than all, while we do this we best subserve the interests of the people of the United States.

No one can be deceived, in view of the official reports and other information coming to us, into the belief that the islands afford any opportunity for the employment of American labor. to the white man in that climate is an impossibility. So far as the native inhabitants are concerned, there is not much danger of the serious competition of the products of their industry with the products of American labor upon this continent. But the possibilities of the future of those islands, in the production of sugar and other tropical products, with an adequate supply of cheap labor, which may be readily found and procured in the Chinaman, do constitute a future menace to American industry.

If we retain the islands, it will be but to one end. That is, exploitation. They can only be exploited by gigantic combinations. The islands will not be the poor man's country. It is the trust that will go there. It is the trust that will own and control the sugar plantation, the timber, and the mineral resources, whatever they may be. It is the trust that will demand cheap labor, and, through its domination in the affairs of our Government at home, we can readily see that it will procure an arrangement by which Chinese labor will be admitted free into the islands. The China-man in his own country renders faithful and diligent work at the rate of less than $2 per month. What would the beet and cane sugar producers of the United States do in competition with the trust having a free hand in the Philippines with Chinese labor? These trusts, now seemingly irresistible, will then become all powerful, and every industry as well as every department of our Government will be subject to their control.

We might at this point divert attention to Cuba. It is not difficult to discover the source of the agitation about our patriotic duty to the people of Cuba, all ending in the proposition to admit raw sugar into the United States free of duty. This, it is claimed, is to afford a market to this product of the Cuban people. Yet with this duty removed there will remain but a single buyer and consumer of Cuban raw sugar, namely, the American Sugar Refining Company. It will fix absolutely the price to be paid to the Cuban for his raw sugar, and when the trust has obtained the sugar at its own price and refined it it will fix the price at which it will sell the refined article to the American people. The trust has no other competitor than that of the Louisiana and beet sugar refiners. This agitation for free raw sugar from Cuba is simply an effort of the sugar trust to acquire a weapon with which to beat down and destroy its only competitors. When the Philip-pines become thus trust infested we can readily forecast what will be the result.

The Democratic proposition is that tariff should be imposed for revenue, the duties to be so adjusted as to operate equally throughout the country and not to discriminate between class or section. We are not in favor of imposing or maintaining any duty for the benefit or encouragement of monopoly. Neither are we in favor of taking off any duty for the special aid of any such monopoly. These trusts, without exception, want free trade in all they have to buy and protective duties to the point of prohibition upon all they have to sell.

When we read the report of the Taft Commission and its recommendations, we find there the declaration that the Philippine Islands are no place for the small capitalist or the small land owner. It follows, therefore, that it is no place for the small rand owner. It follows, therefore, that it is no place for the American people. Whatever line of reasoning we may follow, whatever view of the facts we may take, they all lead logically and necessarily to one conclusion—that it is to the interest of this Government that the islands be relinquished.

We can not set up any system of temporary government in the

We can not set up any system of temporary government in the nature of a tutelage to those people with the ultimate end of admitting them into a participation in the affairs of this nation. A monarchy, an empire, may possibly hold together with hetero-geneous races and divergent interests. If a republic is to survive it must be a homogeneous united nation, with all its people standit must be a homogeneous united nation, with all its people standing upon an equal footing, with equal privileges under the safeguards of a constitution and the operation of equal and just laws. The Philippines can never be admitted into the select and sacred circle constituting the sisterhood of the Republic. Every consideration of our interest forbids it. If we regard their welfare alone, it is an impossibility. We can not and will not rule them justly or to their advantage. We will destroy them without being their successor, but only to give place to another race suited to that climate. Contact with them will be destructive to them and injurious to us. Trade in their products will of course remain injurious to us. Trade in their products will of course remain open to us, as to the rest of the world. Its advantages, whatever they may be, will be greater if we relinquish the islands than if we retain them. The majority substantially admit this. They intend to place the people of the United States upon the same footing with all other nations in respect of the commerce of the islands. If we retain them and rule them despotically outside the Constitution as a sort of freebooting and exploiting enter. isiands. If we retain them and rule them despotically outside the Constitution, as a sort of freebooting and exploiting enter-prise, it will redound to our eternal shame and disgrace. It will bring to us neither gold nor glory.

Every lover of the Republic with a reflective mind must be conscious that our present trend is in the direction of disaster.

Our island possessions will prove a worse curse to us than they

Our island possessions will prove a worse curse to us than they proved to Spain. Her commissioners at Paris were forced to confess that Spain had held the Philippines for three hundred years to the detriment of her welfare. Spain bore the burden as a sort of cross for the propagation of religion. The same influence which led her to subject and hold these islands established the inquisition and waged a destructive war against the people of the Netherlands. The Government of the United States has not for its object either the propagation or suppression of religion. This Government holds no sword of Mahomet. As to this Government, one religion is just as good as another, whether it found its origin Government holds no sword of Mahomet. As to this Government, one religion is just as good as another, whether it found its origin in India, in Arabia, or Europe, or the islands of the sea. Those ministers and religious teachers of the people who advocate expansion in order that the conquest of their respective creeds may keep pace with the desolating power of our armies, mistake the end and genius of our institutions. True religion, like mercy, is not strained. It droppeth like the gentle rain from heaven upon the place beneath. We can not engender love by injustice or propagate religion by force or prosecution. It is no part of the the place beneath. We can not engender love by injustice or propagate religion by force or prosecution. It is no part of the business of this Government to lay taxes, raise armies, and pro-vide navies that Methodism, Catholicism, or Mormonism may find a foothold in the East.

The proposition which the minority submits, if adopted, will prove a simple and effective remedy for the troubles which afflict us. It ought to be accepted. It is in line with the history and traditions of the Republic. It proposes to relinquish the islands. We have destroyed the government which the people there had set up and under which life and property were secure. We have brought about a condition of anarchy. The situation now is such that, whatever we do, whatever departure from the present policy we may take, we have the consolation of knowing that it can not be made worse. The people over there have been demanding and fighting for their independence. The proposition of the minority would accord this to them. In so far as we have had any expression from those people, we learn that they desire to have the shackles taken from their trade. The minority proposes that so long as we continue in possession of the islands there shall be freedom of trade between them and the United States. Having destroyed the government, it is our duty, of course, to the world to remain in the islands long enough until the people there

Of course, when the United States withdraws from the islands, and they assume in all respects the attitude of a foreign country, in that category they will be subject to the provisions of our general laws relating to tariff taxation, the same as other foreign countries. The declaration in the amendment offered by the minority, that goods then entering the United States shall be subject to the like duties which are or may be prescribed for goods entered from other countries, does not imply that we of the minority believe in the tariff legislation now in force. We think, in the interest of our welfare, the duties ought to be readjusted in such a way as not to encourage trusts, foster monopoly, and add to the burdens of our own people. The proposition is that the islands be relinquished, and then that we deal with them as we would deal with other foreign countries, having due regard for the interests of our own people. These interests, of course, in our opinion, demand a modification of existing tariff laws.

We have coerced the aid and allegiance to us of certain of the We have coerced the aid and aneglance to us of certain of the inhabitants of the islands. We can not, of course, leave the islands without obtaining sufficient guaranties for their protection. We have incurred a treaty obligation with Spain that she shall have the same privileges of trade with the islands as the United States for ten years. We must arrange that this obligation be fulfilled. We relinquish sovereignty. We remain until peace had the inhabitant of the inhabitant and orderly government has been set up and come to the islands and orderly government has been set up, and every obligation of honor and duty on our part has been fulfilled.

every obligation of honor and duty on our part has been fulfilled. Then we withdraw, leaving the people whom we rescued from Spanish tyranny to work out their own destiny in their own way.

Can anyone doubt the magic influence the enactment of this measure proposed by the minority would have in the islands in the way of restoring peace and bringing order out of chaos? Why not take this step? Some answer that other nations would laugh at us. This Government ought to be strong enough not to care either for their speers or their threats. Some say that no care either for their sneers or their threats. Some say that no nation of our race ever gives up any territory which it may acquire. These people evidently have not read history. Great Britain once had Cuba and gave it up. She once had the Mosquito coast and gave it up. She once had thirteen American colonies and gave them up. She once had South Africa, gave it up, and is now making a wretched attempt to reclaim it.

No nation whose affairs are administered with foresight and

No nation whose affairs are administered with foresight and intelligence would ever acquire territory or attempt to hold territory which it feels will be a burden, dangerous to the integrity of its institutions and the welfare of its people.

Let the Ishmaelite go; otherwise the burden of our difficulties will grow. Our means of national defense will be weakened. Taxes, like the old man of the sea, will hang upon our backs, and in the end the gory head of the Republic may be raised upon a pike as a terrible warning to any who would struggle to be free.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of debating this bill, but I wish to add a few words to what I said in a colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] when he was upon the floor. I refrained from doing so at that time because I did not wish to unduly interrupt him.

The Senate will remember that the Senator from Massachusetts

The Senate will remember that the Senator from Massachusetts gave as one reason why there was urgency in the present situation requiring immediate action upon this bill, that there were no ships engaged in the trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States which were authorized under the law to engage in that trade since the decision of the Supreme Court had determined that the Philippine Islands constituted a part of our domestic territory and that therefore it resistants that the state of the ritory, and that therefore it was important that this bill should be passed immediately, or at a very early date, because it contained a provision which authorized ships not under American registry to continue in that trade.

I asked the distinguished and learned Senator under what authority the ships now engaged in that trade not under American registry were so engaged, and he replied that he was not informed. I then asked him if he did not know, if he had not seen in the public prints, the statement that from the War Department there had been an order issued authorizing vessels not under American registry to continue in that trade, and the Sena-tor then recalled the fact that he did so remember, and immedi-ately proceeded to defend the act of the War Department for having issued such an order. He urged that, if it had not been done, there could have been no trade continued by vessels to and from the Philippines, from the fact that there were no vessels there authorized under the law to engage in such trade, and consequently there would have been an immediate cessation of the trade.

My distinguished friend from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] suggested that at the time of the rendition of this decision there were a large number of vessels upon the Pacific coast loaded and ready to proceed to those islands which had to stop, and which only proceeded by virtue of the fact, as I understood him, that they were permitted by the authorities to do so in violation of law.

Mr. President, the reply of the Senator from Massachusetts is no reason why the War Department has any power or authority or privilege to violate the law. I will read the law. I can not read it all, but I will read enough of it to show what it is. It is section 4311 of the Revised Statutes, which is in these words.

Section 4311. Vessels of 20 tons and upward enrolled in pursuance of this title, and having a license in force, or vessels of less than 20 tons, which, although not enrolled, have a license in force, as required by this title, and no others, shall be deemed vessels of the United States entitled to the privileges of vessels employed in the coasting trade or fisheries.

There is the law of the United States in as simple, as plain, as the property of the property language as words could enable.

unambiguous, and as peremptory language as words could enable it to be framed, and yet the position of the learned and distin-guished and honorable Senator from Massachusetts is that if an emergency arises by which trade will be stopped an officer of this Government can take the responsibility to annul the law by an order and to declare that it may be violated with impunity.

Mr. President, one of the great evils of this miserable business upon which we have entered is that it brings us face to face frequently with situations where it is very important—I will not say "very important," but where there is an urgent need for the vio-lation of law in order that there may not be greater evils, perhaps. And yet it was not the contemplation of the framers of this Government that when a law was upon the statute book, if it would work evil any department of this Government should have the right to violate it because it would work evil.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir. Mr. MITCHELL. Would the Senator from Georgia, in the case to which he has just referred, arraign the Secretary of the Treasury—for it was the Secretary of the Treasury, I believe, in pursuance of an order of the Secretary of War, who did it—for permitting certain foreign vessels to clear to our outlying possessions under the peculiar circumstances surrounding the case and surrounding corresponding our components at the time, in view of the recent decirounding our commerce at that time, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court? Does the Senator see no distinction in the act of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of War in a case of that kind from an act had he permitted a foreign vessel to clear from the port of Portland, Oreg., to the port of San Francisco, Cal., or from any other port on the mainland of the United States to any other port on the mainland? Does the Senator not draw a distinction? Can not he see, under the circumstances, a difference, especially in view of the fact that the Philippine Archipelago is admittedly under military rule?

Mr. BACON. Before I get through I will answer the Senator.

I am speaking now of an order of the War Department authorizing vessels not under American registry to engage in a trade that the statute of the United States says they shall not engage in, and, as I shall endeavor to show before I get through, it was an unnec-

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator would not make any allowance, then; he would not take into consideration any emergency—an emergency then upon the country by the peculiar situation of affairs—nor would he consider the fact that the islands are under

Mr. BACON. I say no emergency can authorize an officer of a department of this Government to violate the statute law.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to cite a case from the Supreme Court?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I am not going to occupy the floor long, and Senators can follow on just as much as they please; but I prefer to make my statement before I engage as they please; but I prefer to make my statement before I engage in a running debate. I shall be through in a few moments, and I want to get through first with the statement I propose to make. I was proceeding to say that it was not the contemplation of the framers of this Government that Congress, which was vested exclusively with all legislative power, should share that power with either of the other departments. The very first sentence in the Constitution of the United States is that which confers all legislative power on Congress, and it was never contemplated by legislative power on Congress, and it was never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution that that power could ever be shared with it by any other department of the Government. On the contrary, not only is there no such grant to any other depart-ment, but there is an absolute prohibition to each of the other departments.

Mr. President, it has come to pass that all the departments of this Government are engaged in legislation—not only the legislative department, but the executive department and the judicial department. I do not say that in any offensive sense. has come to be recognized and to be talked about in the newspapers as a correct thing for the judiciary department to engage in legislation—not simply statute legislation, but in amending the Constitution of the United States.

I saw printed in the Washington Post-I wish I had it here to read it—an editorial article from one of the prominent Republican newspapers—and I have seen similar articles in the New York and other newspapers-in which the country was congratulated on the fact that we have an elastic Constitution, and that that elasticity could be taken advantage of by the judiciary of the country to so amend it by judicial exposition as to adapt it to the changing needs of the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I interrupt the Senator again?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia. yield?

Mr. BACON. If it is for an inquiry I will yield, but not for an argument.
Mr. MITCHELL. For a question.

Mr. BACON. I yield for a question.
Mr. MITCHELL. Do I understand from the Senator from Georgia that if he had been Secretary of the Treasury or Secretary of War at the date of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States-I am assuming for the sake of argument that there were no American vessels, or none flying the American flag or bearing an American registry, on the ocean between the United States and our outlying possessions, and as a matter of fact there were but very few—he would have stopped the commerce of that whole country? That he would have refused to allow a foreign vessel to clear, and held up the commerce of the Pacific Ocean?

Mr. BACON. I do not understand, in the first place, that there was any such order by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I am not addressing myself to any supposititious case. I am addressnot addressing myself to any suppositious case. I am addressing myself to the actual fact, as stated in the public press, that the Secretary of War issued an order permitting and authorizing certain vessels to engage in trade, which, under our navigation laws, those vessels are directly and positively prohibited from engaging in.

Mr. MITCHELL. It would have been all the same in the case of the Secretary of War?

Mr. BACON. The Senator asked me that question before.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator would have allowed commerce to be brought to a standstill?

Mr. BACON. Yes; if that answer will suit the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is what I want to know.

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that and will make it a little

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that, and will make it a little more elaborate than I have done by the simple word "yes;" but I use the word "yes" in order that the Senator may be satisfied

The law does not say that an officer shall execute the law except in cases of emergency, and that then he may violate it. The law does not give him the right to judge when he shall violate it. The law says that he shall not violate it under any circumstances, and he swears that he will not. No man, be he official or private citizen, is above the law.

But, Mr. President, the Senator interrupted me on a different line, and I will, with his permission, resume what I was saying at that time. I repeat that I do not speak of judicial legislation in an offensive sense, but I venture to say that it has gotten to be recognized by many that the judiciary of the country shall be the judge of what ought to be the law, and that it is their right, whenever existing law does not meet their approval, by judicial exposition to amend it in order to adapt a decision to such requirements as they may deem necessary and to prepare quirements as they may deem necessary and to prevent what they may conceive to be evils which would result, if they, without addition or subtraction, determined the law as it exists.

I find in the decisions of the courts grave arguments why constitutional questions should be decided in a certain way or should not be decided in a certain way; that if they were decided in a certain way it would be an injury to the commerce and the business of the country. Of course, where a law is open to two fair constructions, it is legitimate to show that that one constructions had been always it will lead to said. tion should not be adopted because it will lead to evil. But there are limits to this rule of construction, and that is different from originating a power never heard of before and declaring it to exist, because unless thus created by judicial edict evil will result. And I repeat, Mr. President, that it has got to be so that in some of the great newspapers of the country there is an absolute assertion of the country there is an absolute assertion. tion and congratulation of the country upon the fact that such is the elasticity of the Constitution and such the power of the courts that, shown by their practice, they can use that elasticity to amend the Constitution. They speak in terms of "judicial amend-ment" of the Constitution, and applaud it. If there should be occasion hereafter to again refer to this subject, I shall bring some of these extracts in here and read them to the Senate.

But, Mr. President, as I stated, this unauthorized legislation is not limited to the judiciary. We are having the Executive Departments undertaking to determine when an exigency arises which will authorize a departmental officer to legislate, and Senwhich will authorize a departmental officer to legislate, and Senators like the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] stand in the Senate of the United States to defend it. The Senator asked me, as if it were a monstrous proposition to deny the power, whether in case obedience to law would stop a ship, the Secretary of the Treasury has a right to violate the law in order that the ship may proceed? Who gave to any citizen of the United States when clothed with a little brief authority the right to violate the law? What gives him the right to make law any more than a private citizen has that right? One who annuls a law is as much of a lawmaker as is the one who enacts law; and one who suspends a statute and says it shall not operate for two months is as much of statute and says it shall not operate for two months is as much of a lawmaker as one who finally repeals that statute.

Mr. President, I did not expect to say this much, and would not have done so if the honorable Senator had not asked questions which indicate that, in his opinion, I was presenting a very outrageous proposition here in contending that this thing ought not to have been done. In my opinion, it ought not to have been done, but unfortunately we have gotten accustomed to the violation of law. In the last Congress we called attention to the fact that the law was being violated down in Cuba. Sections of these statutes were read, saying peremptorily and without qualification that an officer of the United States Army should only receive a certain amount of money—that is prescribed in the statute—and that he should have no other from any other source. But the fact was disclosed here that down in Cuba, and with the knowledge and consent and approval of those in power, that law was being violated, and some officers on duty there were receiving double pay.

Mr. President, if I should stop here to enumerate all the cases in which I think law has been violated, and if other Senators here should endeavor to narrate the instances in which they think the law has been violated, we would find use for very much more time than I expect to consume to-day.

There has been no necessity for any stoppage of the commerce of the United States on account of the decision of the Supreme Court, certainly for any material length of time. If there had been such necessity that would have been no excuse for the viola-tion of law. If it was a matter of sufficient importance to require that the law should be changed, even if Congress were not in session, the President of the United States had the power to call it in session. But it so happened in this case that this decision was pronounced immediately preceding the convening of Congress, and there has never been a day from the first day that Congress met until this good hour, when in that single day a joint resolution could not have been gotten through both Senate and House giving the very authority which it is now sought to confer by this provision of this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I suggest another question to the

gia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. In making the point that he does, that there has been a violation of law here, has the Senator taken into consideration the fact that the Philippine Archipelago is under a sideration the fact that the Philippine Archipelago is under a military government, under the control and direction of the Secretary of War, and that, after all, perhaps the Secretary of War has a right under existing law to do precisely what he did do?

Mr. BACON. Well, I do not recognize any such law.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think he has the right.

Mr. BACON. The Supreme Court does not recognize any such law. The Supreme Court says that the Secretary of War had not a right to make any tariff; that that was a matter already covered by law, that Congress alone could make a stariff and that the by law; that Congress alone could make a tariff, and that the Secretary of War in prescribing a tariff was subject to the laws of Congress. When the court stated that the Philippine Archipelago was a part of the domestic territory of the United States, and that therefore there could be no tariff between that country and this, it was because Congress had provided a law which regulated the tariff in all domestic territory; and if the statute of the United States was of binding force in the case of a tariff, it was

Of course I shall not pursue that kind of argument, because no Senator is going to contend that the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon is correct, and the majority of the committee itself recogorigin is correct, and the majority of the committee test it ecog-nize the contrary to be true and urge it as a reason why his bill should be put through in hot haste, without giving Senators an opportunity to see those things which they ought to see and to examine carefully before they enter upon this important and seri-ous legislation. The reason they give is that there could be no such authority in the War Department, such as that suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and that consequently there must be legislation by Congress.

I repeat that there has never been a day from the first meeting of the present session of Congress until to-day when on that particular day there could not have been a joint resolution passed through both the Senate and House which would have given the authority in this particular that is sought to be conferred by this bill; and, sir, I will state—and I think with no impropriety—that the suggestion was communicated to Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, after consultation by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, that if such an emergency existed, if it were true that there were no vessels which could enter into this coastwise trade by reason of the statute which I have read, we were ready to waive all else and have that joint resolution enacted immediately.

So I submit to the judgment of the Senate that the reply of the distinguished Senator, that an emergency existed, in the first place, can not be accepted as an excuse for the violation of any law, especially by a civil officer. I do not know that I shall even make any "especially" about it—I shall say by anybody. And in the second place, that if the law as it stood was such as to work hardship to the commerce of the country, it was perfectly competent, even if Congress were not in session, to bring it in session, while in this particular case the fact is Congress was in session so immediately thereafter that the intervening time was inconsiderable.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator to make that statement with a little more amplitude? What was the precise thing which the Senator notified gentlemen on this side of the Chamber that all the Senators on the other side of the Chamber were willing to do?

Mr. BACON. The Senator makes the statement a little more

Mr. BACON. The Senator makes the statement a little more broadly than I did.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator will make it exact.

Mr. BACON. I will make it again with pleasure. I said I presumed I could state, without impropriety, that the communication had been made by Senators on this side of the Chamber to Senators on the other side, that after consultation—not with all the Senators, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, but with a number of Senators on this side, there had been a general with a number of Senators on this side—there had been a general agreement that if the Senators in charge of legislation desired to agreement that if the Senators in charge of legislation desired to have a joint resolution put through promptly and without debate, conferring upon vessels not under the American registry the power and right and privilege of trading with the Philippine Islands, it could be done.

Now, Mr. President, I did not expect to go into this matter at the present time, because really I feel reluctance in taking part so early in anything connected with this debate, but the single suggestion on the part of the distinguished invites Senator from so early in anything connected with this debate, but the single suggestion on the part of the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts looking to the necessity for any immediate urgent action in the consideration and passage of this bill is this particular feature of it. And unless there is some such reason there ought not to be all this hot haste, this whip-and-spur business, in the consideration and passage of the pending bill.

There never was a situation where Senators were confronted with propertions which required more capacital eveningtions and with propositions which required more careful examination and study on their part than those contained in this bill. There never was a situation which, by reason of the vast distance intervening between that country and this and the difficulty of ascertaining what conditions are there, so called for prudent and careful and painstaking investigation to ascertain those conditions as the present situation does.

Yet, Mr. President, with a resolution pending, introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], looking to an investigation which shall disclose the actual conditions there, with an appeal on the part of the minority of the Philippine Committee that the civil governor of the islands, who is now in this with an appear of the party of the limitority of the limitipant committee that the civil governor of the islands, who is now in this country or about to arrive, and who is presumed to be charged with a great deal of information which ought to be communicated to us, might be given the opportunity to tell us what he knows, these Senators say "No; you shall know nothing from him or from anybody else, so far as it is necessary to delay action upon this bill before you can be informed of it."

Mr. President, this bill incorporates a detailed tariff bill enacted by the Commissioners of the Philippine Islands. It enacts it as a law, and yet to-day for the first time there is laid upon our desks that law, a complicated tariff law, relating both to imports and to exports, and Senators say we shall be rushed into the consideration of this measure without having the opportunity to examine it. It was laid on our tables, printed, this morning.

Mr. TELLER. Where is it?

Mr. BACON. There it is. Even the distinguished and diligent Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who generally sees everything, has not even had the opportunity to see it and did not know it was here.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that no copy of it was laid on my table.

will state that no copy of it was laid on my table.

Mr. BACON. I am prepared to believe that, because, as I said, the Senator is diligent in looking after all such things. simply an illustration of the enormity of the proposition that we should be rushed into the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to say to the Senator from Georgia that I obtained from the document room over a week ago a copy of the document to which he refers.

Mr. BACON. Well, the Senator from North Dakota, being one of the elect, on the inside, probably had information that those of us not so fortunate were denied. I was on the point this morning of going to the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts and asking him where we could get it. If it was here before, I did not know it.

Mr. LODGE. It has been here a good while, I will say to the Senator. He had but to ask for it. That is what I did.

No. DA CON. Is that the way legislation is done here? Is not

Mr. BACON. Is that the way legislation is done here? Is not each table here every day covered with reports that relate to legislation? Are they not distributed around? Are we to imagine and conjecture and divine that such papers exist?

But, Mr. President, here is a remarkable proposition. Here is the Philippine tariff bill, which enacts bodily, simply by refer-ence, another tariff bill, and says it shall be the law. It is a de-tailed tariff bill as to imports and exports into and from the Phil-ippine Islands. It is not set out in the pending bill, and I repeat that not only myself, but such a diligent Senator as the Senator from Colorado did not know there was such a thing in existence, and it was printed and this morning for the first time has been laid upon our desks.

Mr. TELLER. The report was printed only yesterday.
Mr. BACON. I suppose there must be still further advantages which the Senator from North Dakota enjoys, and that there is a special edition printed for the elect, which is denied to the balance of us.

Mr. TELLER. May I say a word?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I have on my desk this morning the annual reports of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901; report of the Philippine Commission, in two parts; part 1. What I was talking about is the report which accompanies Calendar No. 200, which was published yesterday. To-day is the 21st. It contains the Philippine tariff. Now, I say that has not been laid on my table, and I was not aware that there was such a document.

has not been laid on my table, and I was not all such a document.

Mr. LODGE. The Philippine tariff was published in full in the House report last December, and anybody could have it for the asking. I imagine it was laid on every desk. The House published it in full over a month ago.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that it was not laid on my desk, and it was not laid on the desks of those who sit near me.

of those who sit near me.

Mr. LODGE. A matter that is a House document certainly

Mr. LODGE. A matter that is a House document certainly can not be said to be concealed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there is another remarkable fact which happens to be within my personal knowledge. I have alluded to the fact that the appeal which has been made by Senators, that before we go into this legislation we should have such information as Governor Taft could give us, has been denied to us, and that Senators insist that we shall proceed in the absence of that information which we are entitled to have from the governor. But there is a more remarkable fact, and one within my ernor. But there is a more remarkable fact, and one within my personal knowledge.

How many Senators here have tried to get the full report of the Taft Commission? From whom has it been obtained? Through the courtesy of the junior Senator from Massachusetts, after having inquired through all the document rooms and elsewhere, I found that I could get a part of it from the War Department, and last week I sent there and got the first part. Then the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, after I had reported to him that I could get only the first part, said I could get the second part in his room; and, I should add at the same time, when I got the first part from the War Department, he also kindly sent me another copy of the first part.

But the remarkable fact to which I wish to call attention is this: Of all things that both Senate and House were entitled to before we should be called upon to consider anything in the way of legislation relative to the Philippine Islands was the report of the Taft Commission. Now, the fact I know is this, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to it: I know it as a fact that the report of the Taft Commission came over in November, because I came across the Pacific on the ship with the man who had it and who brought it as a special messenger.

It has been here two months. It could have been printed any day, and yet it has been withheld from us, and we are called upon to enter upon this important legislation not only denied the opportunity to examine Governor Taft and others whom I could name, who I know know a good deal about the Philippine Islands—officers who are now in this country—but the typewritten report of the Commission was in this country for two months and was never printed and generally distributed to Congress.

Now, I do protest, Mr. President, that this hot haste, this whip

Now, I do protest, Mr. Fresident, that this not haste, this winp and spur, this utter denial of the opportunity of Senators to inform themselves through the legitimate avenues of information, is not according to the usages of the Senate.

Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of such extended remarks. I have been led into them largely by the questions which Senators have propounded to me. I rose simply to protest that no department officer has the right to violate law upon the ground that he may think that the emergency exists, and that in this case the emergency did not exist, because Congress met immediately after the decision of the Supreme Court, and there never was a day when a joint resolution could not have been passed which would have relieved the necessity for any such violation of law, or any need for it, for there never was any necessity.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the position of the Senator from Georgia that the consequences of the construction of any statute or any constitution shall not be taken into consideration to influence that construction is in contravention of the history of the jurisprudence of England and America.

Mr. BACON. And the Senator from Georgia has not said any such thing

Mr. STEWART. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. BACON. All right, Mr. STEWART. I return the compliment,

Mr. BACON. I accept it. Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Georgia yielded to everybody but me, and now he proposes to interrupt me.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. He will allow me to interrupt him to that extent.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want any pardon. [Laughter.]

Take the English constitution. Every student of that constitu-tion and of English law knows that the English reports abound in decisions in which the courts have held that Parliament could not have intended such a construction, because it would be injurious to or destructive of the rights of the people.

In view of what the Supreme Court has done under graver circumstances it seems extraordinary that a point should be made on the Department for allowing commerce to go on after the decision of the Supreme Court, and that commerce was not broken up commerce which has harmed nobody and which has done great

For eighteen years the miners of the West made their own laws, rules, and regulations for the government of their mining claims and for the government of mines, and the courts enforced them. There was no other title but the title of possession. The statute denounced the possessors as trespassers. They were criminals under a literal construction of the statute. The case came before the Supreme Court of the United States, and is found in 3d Wallege. Mr. O'Connor was on one side and I hereprened to be on the the Supreme Court of the United States, and is found in 3d Wallace. Mr. O'Connor was on one side and I happened to be on the other. I did not make any argument, but I stated the facts. At that time a million and a half people were holding property in express violation of the statute. Mr. O'Connor made a similar speech—that everybody had to obey the law; that they were all trespassers; that they could have no rights.

It required a thousand dollars at that time to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the case, and he contended that those people could have no property rights as they were trespassers.

Court jurisdiction of the case, and he contended that those people could have no property rights, as they were trespassers.

There was a good deal of excitement over it. The Supreme Court decided that those trespassers did have property rights, notwithstanding the statute, notwithstanding that all their rights were in violation of the statute. The court say in that case that they will not shut their eyes to the history of the country and do a great outrageous wrong; that to declare that they had no rights after these great interests had been developed and States admitted would be destructive.

The decision of the courts of the United States and of Great Britain are full of cases where the courts look to the consequences and would not commit a great wrong. There is in all history no great judge whose name is revered, whose opinions do not dwell as much upon the consequences of the construction and the conse-

as much upon the consequences of the construction and the consequences of the law as he lays it down as upon the statute. The statute must yield to great emergencies. That has been the rule of American and English jurisprudence from the beginning. That is the way our law grows up. The great body of the law is not made by statute, but it grows out of the circumstances and the necessity of cases; and the man who sticks in the bark and does not see the great equities of the case will never be heard of

does not see the great equities of the case will never be heard of as a judge or a statesman.

It is trivial to talk about it being violation of law to let this commerce proceed. It would have been a crime against the people engaged in it for the Department to have taken advantage of this technical rule and to have stopped the commerce of that country. It would have been an outrage which no civilized people would have permitted. No administrative officer in our country or in Great Britain would have been guilty of such conduct. So I am astonished that any American Senator should contend that it is the duty of judges in all cases to construe the law literally where it would work a great wrong. It never has been done and never will be done where enlightened jurisprudence prevails.

Mr. LODGE. A number of Senators desire an executive session.
Therefore I will not undertake—
Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to say just a word?
Mr. LODGE. In a moment. I will not undertake to review the many grievances of the Senator from Georgia, but I think I can relieve his mind on one point. So long as he is in his present admirable and vigorous health no bill to which he is opposed is going mirable and vigorous health no bill to which he is opposed is going to pass the Senate in hot haste. I shall move an executive session when the Senator from Colorado has concluded.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have not been complaining at all of any secrecy in this matter. I have never seen this tariff. I did not know it had been printed by the House. When the Senator from Georgia was complaining, I said this document had not yet been printed. I heard the Senator yesterday present it. It has not been put on my deak. I understand from the young men that it did not come my desk. I understand from the young man that it did not come down to the Senate Chamber until after we convened, and therefore it was not distributed to all the desks. I was not entering any complaint. Mr. LODGE.

I knew the Senator was not.

That is all I care to say now. Mr. TELLER. EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 22, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 21, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 9315, the urgent deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Sherman in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9315) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIBLEY Mr. Chairman, whoever has made even the most cursory survey of the magnitude of our arid lands, or has witnessed practical tests of their irrigation, realizes to some extent their won-derful productivity and ultimate economic value. No citizen of the Republic who glories in her past or looks forward with faith to her more resplendent future, when multiplied millions shall find homes of prosperity and peace within her borders, denies the endless train of blessings which must follow a comprehensive and wise system of irrigation of our arid lands which shall cause them wise system of irrigation of our and lands which shall cause them to abound with fruits of corn, of vine, and of olives. Practical tests have demonstrated that in richness and productivity they will rival the most favored lands of ancient Egypt.

I have traveled over that portion of the country which when a boy at school was designated upon the map of my geography as "the Great American Desert," and upon that desert have found populous towns and homes of contentment and prosperity situated in the widet of a corner of cultivated land producing the highest populous towns and homes of contentment and prosperity situated in the midst of acres of cultivated land, producing the highest quality of the fruits of the tree, the vine, and the field. Hardly an acre of that great desert, upon which it is impossible to convey water through irrigating ditches, but has a wealth of harvests in its bosom for gladdening the generations yet unborn. One acre of this arid land under irrigation is capable of producing as much as 6 acres of average land in the States of the rich Middle West.

as 6 acres of average land in the States of the rich Middle West.
Under a comprehensive system of irrigation the arid lands of the United States are capable, in my judgment, of feeding a much larger population than to-day dwells within our national borders.
Realizing, as everyone must, the capabilities of these desert lands, the wealth which they shall yield our populace, realizing, as all must, the obligations which will rest upon the nation to develop upon a stupendous scale the storage of the waters for their fructification, nevertheless it seems to me that this is a question to absorb the attention and enlist the energies of another and later generation; and that every member of this House representing wholly or in part an agricultural constituency should by every honorable method at his command oppose any measure which involves in the near future the expenditure of untold millions of money, to be taken in the form of taxation from all, for the accomplishment of a project not demanded by the needs of the present age, and whose benefits can be enjoyed by but a

We are the trustees, the guardians, of the children yet unborn, whose heritage we may not squander, and whose lands we may not alienate. As a sacred trust for those who follow us, we should so act that such lands as are still reserved by the Govern-ment should not become the spoil of the speculator or minister to the schemes of the adventurous town-site boomer.

There are other reasons which come to me why it is a plain duty to oppose this measure, reasons formed, perhaps, upon a narrower, a lower, and a more selfish plane, and yet sufficiently cogent to prompt my earnest efforts to defeat any measure looking to the present undertaking in the effort of this reclamation.

The farmer who thirty years ago was of all Americans the most independent sovereign has during the last generation witnessed a decline in the value of his farm lands equivalent in the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States to at least 50 per cent, with a corresponding decline in the value of all the products of his skill. He labors on his farm sixteen hours a day, and hardly understands why we legislate for an eight-hour day, with four weeks' vacation and four weeks' sick leave each year with pay, for all engaged in the Government service, and yet seldom propose legislation which will lighten his burdens in life or add to the sum of his happiness.

When some measure is pending directly for his protection from frauds and counterfeits upon his products, such as the oleomargarine bill, his friends must move heaven and earth in his behalf or go down to defeat. He has been the hewer of wood and drawer of water for his brethren, and with all his labors too often looks in vain for his just portion of what he has added to the general storehouse. For twenty-five years he has seen, almost uninter-ruptedly, a decline year by year in the value of the old homestead, and year by year a decline in the value of the things grown upon his farm.

Unrequited effort has chilled his hopes and caused him to dread that Markham's "Man with the hoe" may be the dismal future from which he can not escape. During the last four years, for the first time in a generation, he has had the relaxation necesfor the first time in a generation, he has had the relaxation necessary for him to unbend his back and look about him with somewhat of his old-time cheerfulness. For the first time in twenty-five years he finds substantial recompense for his toil and some release from his drudgery. For the first time in a quarter of a century, having paid off in whole or in part the mortgage upon his farm, he looks again with hope and faith toward the future. He has seen a great Government give to every citizen who would enter the lists of competition against him a farm of 160 acres of enter the lists of competition against him a farm of 160 acres of the richest land the sun ever shone upon.

He has seen under that competition his broad acres pinch and narrow and the comforts of his fireside diminish. He has seen competition in his calling so stimulated that the low-priced surplus of products of agriculture has determined the value of the entire product. He has seen the mortgage slowly but surely eating up his farm and has voiced no protest, or voiced that protest in such faint and feeble tones that by the time it reached the seat of government it was drowned in the babel and din of noise of others, who loudly clamored for advantage. To the wide world went the message which you and I heard sung by the school children thirty-five years or more ago, "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm."

Whether he was rich enough or not he did so, and this, along with other contributing causes, well understood by the student of political economy, which causes are now happily removed, lessened year by year the prices of his products and the value of his possessions. If it were to be announced to-morrow that he Government would give each man in the netter a well stocked greener. ment would give each man in the nation a well-stocked grocery ment would give each man in the nation a well-stocked grocery or a well-equipped tannery for making leather, or a factory for making shoes, what a chorus of protests would arise from every grocer, every tanner, and every shoemaker in America.

Yet in effect this was precisely what happened to the American farmer. Go through New England and see the deserted farms. Within the sound of the statehouse bell in the capital city of New Henryship I have seen have a best of the the through the statehouse bell in the capital city of New Hampshire I have seen houses better than the average American farmhouse, where once lived those who tilled the soil and reaped the fruits of the field; found capacious barns which once bulged with harvests so surrounded with underbrush, growing up to their eaves, that 50 feet distant one would not suspect there might have been a farmhouse in the township. Hundreds of millions of acres of land were opened up in competition with these lands, and the tale of those farmers was told.

You now propose to open up in advance of demand hundreds of millions of acres more to place in competition against the overmillions of acres more to place in competition against the over-burdened farmer. Give the farmer and farmer's boy some oppor-tunity to share in the general prosperity now enjoyed by the peo-ple. Theirs is the most ancient and honorable of all callings. Comprising nearly one-half of our population, they cost the nation but a tithe to govern. They do not fill our jails and prisons, and we propose, through the defeat of this measure, to insure that they shall not fill our almshouses. So long as we have a large exportable surplus of agricultural products, let the farmer meet, as others must, private, but not governmental competition. He as others must, private, but not governmental, competition. He asks few favors, but is entitled to some rights, and in his person and in his property may justly claim that equal consideration accorded to all other classes of society. For twenty-five years the farmers have been in the valley of humiliation, and have but just commenced to climb the hills on the other side. Their faces have commenced to climb the hills on the other side. Their faces have just begun to kindle with hope of the brighter day now dawning.

As advocates of the protective tariff we have preached the glories of the home market. This was true doctrine. So now, when the industrial development of the nation grows by leaps and bounds, until with our increased population twenty-five years from to-day we will no longer be exporters of breadstuffs, but rather consumers; now, when all other classes are basking in the sunshine of prosperity, let us give the farmers who already have farms a chance to pay off their mortgages and to improve the old homestead, hallowed with a thousand sacred memories. What justification can we urge to those farmers who already bear so great a burden of taxation when we invite still further competi-great a burden of taxation when we mytte still further competi-tion against them and compel them to pay their proportionate burden of the cost of inaugurating that competition? Let us wait until the price of the products of his skill, the fruits of his labor, are fixed by the demands of the home rather than a foreign market. Let us wait until the whole product shall deter-mine the price of the fruits of his toil rather than that their value be determined by the surplus of those products. Let us wait until our increased population shall so expand that these lands shall be needed to meet the demand for a greater food supply. Let a later generation perform this labor and the burden of cost bear upon the shoulders of those who shall receive the blessing. Let this great work be done, when it is done, not as a menace to the welfare of any, but let it be so timed that when these great canals are dug, when the last reservoir is finished and the capstone is set in its place all men with universal shout and glad acclaim shall be determined by the surplus of those products. Let us wait un-in its place, all men with universal shout and glad acclaim shall bid it hearty welcome.

Hold these lands for the actual settlers, your children and mine. Hold them for that generation whose trustees we are. Hold them until a quarter of a century hence 150,000,000 of people shall share the cert of the work they then need rether that 75,000,000. the cost of the work they then need, rather than that 75,000,000 shall be taxed for work more wisely done twenty, thirty, or fifty years later

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit an interrup-

Mr. SIBLEY. I should prefer to clos Mr. NEWLANDS. Just a question. Mr. SIBLEY. Yes. I should prefer to close my remarks.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman is a Representative of the great State of Pennsylvania, one of the thirteen original States. Those States at the very commencement of our Government were in the possession of the great Northwest Territory, out of which five States were carved. I ask him what he would think of the wisdom of that generation if the people of his State had insisted that the public lands of Ohio and the States of the great Northwest Territory should not be opened to entry?

Later on, the States having been increased to eighteen, we acquired a vast territory by the great Louisiana purchase. I ask the gentleman what he would think of the wisdom of that generation if they had refused to allow the public lands of Iowa, of Illinois, of Missouri, of Michigan, of Wisconsin, of Minnesota, of Nebraska, of Kansas, the Dakotas, and all the other glorious States which have grown up out of that purchase to be opened up for settlement?

of Kansas, the Dakotas, and all the other glorious States which have grown up out of that purchase to be opened up for settlement?

The gentleman speaks of the competition that will now be involved in opening up the arid region, where only sixty or seventy-five million acres of land are capable of ultimate reclamation in a period of fifty years, and when our population, already grown to 80,000,000 people, is pressing the line of settlement farther and farther to the West. I ask him what he would have thought of the small population of the few States of that period if, pursuing the line of selfish interest suggested by the gentleman, they had declined to open up to settlement the millions and hundreds of millions of acres in the West, now constituting the most magnificent and prosperous States of the Union?

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hardly know how to attempt to answer the gentleman who is so well and properly recognized as the Chesterfield of this House, because I think he has made a very good speech from his side of the question, in the propounding of his interrogatory. I have no criticism to make of the wisdom of those who have preceded us. I have, however, deemed it wise to make some argument upon and invite some inspection of the present measure.

I would wait until the digging of these ditches, the completion of these reservoirs, and the erection of the last dam in its place would come not as a menace to any portion of this nation; but the completion of these canals, dams, and reservoirs shall be so timed that every class and condition can, when the last capstone is set in its place, bid it hearty welcome. I would wait until this work is needed to meet the food supply of a later generation, instead of asking 75,000,000 people to perform a task that is not demanded by the needs of the present age. Wait until a hundred and fifty millions of people of another generation can join in the performance of the present age. ance of that work, and the cost of that burden bear upon the shoulders of those who shall receive the benefits.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the gentleman another question? Mr. SIBLEY. My friend, if you want to ask a question I shall be very glad to yield; but I shall not agree to yield to another speech.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask a simple question.
Mr. SIBLEY. I will attempt to answer a question.
Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that it is proposed in any irrigation scheme presented by the Western members that the cost of these irrigation works in the West shall members that the cost of these irrigation works in the West shall be imposed upon the General Treasury, or upon the general tax-payers of the country? Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. SIBLEY. That is a question whose answer is involved in doubt. I do not know what you now propose or may propose in appropriating these millions; but when you legislate to give all the lands held by this great United States Government for the accomplishment of this purpose, I do not know what difference it would make whether you take $150,000,000 out of the vaults of the Treasury or keep $150,000,000 of money which might arise from a Government sale of land.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit me to state briefly what the objects are?

Mr. SIBLEY. I would reply to my friend from Nevada that I have no doubt in the wide latitude allowed in the debate on this bill he will have ample opportunity to express his views. The bill he will have ample opportunity to express his views. gentleman has frequently spoken on the subject of irrigation and made most eloquent presentations of its merits. I have always listened with great pleasure to my friend from Nevada. He has exhausted about the entire stock of argument in favor of the project, so far as his side is concerned, on the floor of this House. I am not attempting on this occasion to make much of an argument; but as the committee are considering a measure for the irrigation of arid lands and propose to submit it to this body, I desire to advance my reasons in opposition to that scheme.

As a farmer myself, as one who loves the soil, as one who tries to keep in touch with the warm and honest hearts that have in this great country contributed so much to its industrial and moral life, let me urge you before you cast your votes on such a measure to consider your obligations to them. Therefore, in advance of the introduction of that measure to this body, I merely want to arrest the attention of those who represent agricultural gentleman has frequently spoken on the subject of irrigation and

We commenced to talk about the Nicaraguan Canal more than fifty years ago. A half century has rolled around since we negotiated the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as the preliminary to this work. From that time to this successive Presidents in their messages to Congress have presented the value of that undertaking, but it has remained for this session of the House of Representatives to pass the first bill looking toward its immediate construction. Even when this measure shall have run the gauntlet of hostility in the Senate and shall have received Executive approval, ten years or more must elapse before the mingling of the waters of the two great oceans. For the accomplishment of this mighty project the shadow marks the point upon the dial which indicates that the time of its incubation has passed, and that the demand of the present hour is not for discussion, but for action.

We can not doubt that the ripening and fruitage of irrigation will come in its own appointed time. You cite the recommendations of the President. We agree with the President, that the nation has a duty to perform, a task of stupendous magnitude to undertake. What citizen of the Republic but honors the President. dent, and rejoices that in the hour of our national crisis Providence overruled the conspiracies hatched by the forces of evil and gave us, ready to take the helm, one possessed of clearness of vision, intensity of purpose, and dauntlessness in courage, to safely guide the great Ship of State to harbors of prosperity and peace, one whose mental powers and whose moral powers are comprehensive and limpid. In his message to the Congress he has given us, with the accuracy of the historian and the foresight of the prophet, pictures of our present and visions of our more glorious Those who quote him should read again, for to all truth seekers added wisdom will come from added investigation.

It would be unwise to begin by doing too much, for a great deal will doubt-less be learned both as to what can and what can not be safely attempted.

* * * A careful study should be made, both by the nation and by States, of irrigation laws and conditions here and abroad. Ultimately it will probably be necessary for the nation to cooperate with the several arid States in proportion as these States by their legislation and administration show themselves fit to receive it.

With the proper interpretation of his message I am in accord. Let us make the most careful study at home and abroad of the whole subject, and ultimately, after the most careful and scientific research; ultimately, after the most patient and exhaustive study and consideration of plans; ultimately, when under the providence of God the reclamation and fructification of these lands shall come as a blessing to all His children, and not as a threat to any of them, the vision of the desert blossoming as a rose shall be seen and hailed with satisfaction by all men.

To my mind the present proposition for the immediate reclama-tion of these arid lands is the pressing of the poisoned chalice to the lips of the farming classes in this nation, which, if it kill them not, will at least for another generation leave them in either torpor or misery. I am sure that no member of this body, no man who loves his party, his fellow-men, or his country, would willingly inflict injury upon any class of citizenship, much less upon that sturdy industrious honest. God-fearing class who live upon that sturdy, industrious, honest, God-fearing class who live upon American farms and have contributed their more than loyal share to our national progress and development. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I called attention to an item in this deficiency appropriation bill that emphasizes a feature of the civil service of the Government that stands greatly in need of reform. The item itself is unobjectionable, as it provides only for the vacation properly due to a very deserving and meritorious class of employees in the Government Printing Office, and who get no sick leave as do the clerks ment Printing Office, and who get no sick leave as do the clerks and employees in the Executive Departments here. This appropriation of $60,000, made necessary to enable the employees there to receive their proper vacation, is but the one-fifth part needed for the entire year for that purpose. On this subject the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] on yesterday said:

Mr. Cannon. The expense of paying leaves of absence to employees in the Government Printing Office, under the law giving them thirty days' leave of absence with full pay, is, in round numbers, $300,000 a year. Now, my friend asks whether any allowance is made for sick leave in addition. I understand not.

And the gentleman from Tennessee said:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; there is no allowance for sick leave in the Government Printing Office.

This is important now only as furnishing a basis for calculation as to the amount it costs the Government for the "sick leave" of thirty days with pay which is allowed under the law as it at present stands, and as to the necessity for the reform in the present stands, and as service.

I was pleased to note that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. Cannon] was of the opinion that the sick-leave privilege granted to the employees of the Government at Washington exclusively should be withdrawn.

I am pleased to quote his language of yesterday again, as he consider a question proposed by me:

Mr. Cannon. I will answer that question by saying that I do not believe additional leave for Government employees should be allowed, and the only legislation that ought to be had is to give thirty days leave of absence with full pay and amend the law taking away the sick leave from employees who now have it.

I have stood upon this floor many times under the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois. I have seen the members on this side of the House, almost to a man, warmly espousing the cause of reform in expenditure by him advocated, and many times when he was but feebly supported on the other side, and I felicitate my-self that I am now to serve under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman in a reform that involves nearly $3,000,000 to the people and the taxpayers of our Government. The law on the subject of vacations and "sick leave" stands as

The law on the subject of vacations and "sick leave" stands as follows: Thirty days vacation each year is given to the employees of the Executive Departments, in Washington only, with pay. In addition to that the thirty-day annual "sick-leave" privilege is granted with pay. Something like two years ago the employees in the Agricultural Department asked, and fairly so, that they be granted fifteen days annual vacation, and this House in its wisdom granted that to the employees of that Department outside of the city of Washington. the city of Washington.

This House within a year in its wisdom has granted to the employees of the arsenals fifteen days vacation with pay; it has granted a like amount to the navy-yard employees of the Government in and outside of the city of Washington. To-day the printers and employees of the printing department of Washington are denied the thirty days' sick leave with pay, although they secure the thirty days' vacation. The "sick leave" is granted to the no more department of Washington are the thirty days are proposed to the Fragratius Days through the programment of Washington. the thirty days' vacation. The "sick leave" is granted to the no more deserving employees of the Executive Departments in Washington. This special privilege of a "sick leave of thirty days each year with pay" is nowhere else granted to any Government employees save in the departments in Washington. The gentleman said that it costs $300,000 annually to provide for the thirty-day vacation leaves granted to the employees of the printing department alone. There are something like 15,000 Government employees who may avail themselves of this exclusively Washington privilege, and so long as the leavestands it may be counted on ton privilege, and so long as the law stands it may be counted on with confidence that very many will avail themselves of its pro-

Now, if the law must stand to grant them thirty days' leave of absence with pay each year, and in addition to that thirty days' leave called "sick leave" with pay, and as it was demonstrated by the tables of figures of the departments presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] in 1897, that nearly 50 per cent of the executive employees at Washington availed them-tleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bingham] in 1897, that nearly 50 per cent of the executive employees at Washington availed themselves of this sick-leave privilege, and each of whom taking about one-half the time allowed, we find that if it takes $300,000 to provide vacation leave for the printing employees it will take something like $3,000,000 to provide the "sick leave" for the Executive Department employees in Washington.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] said the national tax per capita of the people was not $12, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark]; but the gentleman from Illinois did not say what it was. In the last year it cost every man, and every woman, and every child, by taxation for national purposes, $10 per capita. Here we have a reform proposed, not radical, not drastic, and not unjust. By taking away the "sick-leave" privilege, that has been abused and too generally availed of in Washington by the employees to whom it is accorded, we have a means of justly and properly saving money sufficient to add an item for a just appropriation for fifteen days' vacation privileges to those Government employees not thus benefited to-day.

Who is it that is benefited by the "sick-leave" privilege in the 15,000 executive-department employees in the city of Washington? Your constituents and mine who are employees of the Government outside of Washington are not accorded these privileges; but we find in the city of Washington, where the employees are near the members of Congress, that they have this special privilege—this uncalled-for privilege—of thirty days' sick leave at the great expense to the Treasury I have named before.

In 1897 and 1898, on the executive, judicial, and legislative appropriation bill, an amendment was made to the law as it for

In 1897 and 1898, on the executive, judicial, and legislative ap-In 1897 and 1898, on the executive, judicial, and legislative appropriation bill, an amendment was made to the law as it formerly existed. Theretofore they had been granted thirty days' vacation with pay, and also thirty days' sick leave with pay, and in addition to that, in a meritorious case, thirty days' additional "sick leave" with pay, making in a year one-quarter of that time of which they could avail themselves by claiming sick and vacation leave with pay.

This is a time, I think, when the Appropriations Committee, under the able leadership of its distinguished chairman, and his equally distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, General BINGHAM, who advocated the other reform proposition that

BINGHAM, who advocated the other reform proposition that passed the House in 1897 and 1898, should stand for retrenchment and reform in this branch of the civil service of the Government. There is no justification for this special privilege; there is no reason why the employees in Washington should be treated differently from the employees generally throughout the country. The Appropriation Committee is all-powerful, and the gentleman from Illinois is all-powerful and an able legislator, and has shown himself ready at all times to stand for retrenchment. The committee has the power to do this, and if you gentlemen will stand in advocacy of the repeal of the pending law there will be no difficulty in securing action upon it. You will then secure equal justice to the employees of the Government who are in the service outside of the city of Washington, and not make a discrimination in favor of those who are employed here. The rural free-delivery carriers are entitled to fifteen days' vacation—the First Assistant Postmaster-General in his report recommends it—and all of the other employees outside of the Executive Departments are entitled to the same; and I ask why this additional time should be given to the employees here which is not given to them?

The figures submitted by the Department in 1897, when this question was under consideration, and brought to our attention by an appropriation bill, show that in Washington, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark] on yesterday, that a tenure of office tended to produce great sickness without appreciably endangering a long life. I ask, gentlemen, if that is not an alarming condition of affairs. These employees are simply encouraged in their sickness by the law as it stands. It takes today a large and expensive machinery of the Government to keep track of illness in the various departments, including physicians, to examine, and the keeping of records, and to keep track generally of the employees who are taking advantage of this privilege allowed them under the law of "sick leave." Now, if they were cut off from this additional thirty days' "sick leave" allowed them, the Government would save this amount of service, and I am satisfied that the service would be just as efficient as it is now, and less delay in the handling of the business of the departments. You have given them a sufficient leave of absence for recuperaand less delay in the handling of the business of the departments. You have given them a sufficient leave of absence for recuperation and rest under all circumstances that surround them, and if the other is withdrawn the Government will be enabled to extend to the employees outside of the city of Washington, as it should in justice do, not thirty days' but, as we ask, fifteen days' vaca-

The careful and conscientious Government employee will not object to the amendment of the law in the interest of justice and equality.

Scores of them will delight in the withdrawal of this special privilege from those who unnecessarily and unreasonably avail themselves of it.

If there are such as feel that they should have a law for their special protection and emolument to the exclusion of others equally deserving, I think it will be those of whose services the Government can well dispense and permit their places to be filled by conscientious people, willing to aid their fellows in the service of the country to the extent of equal privileges of vacation and "sick leave." sick leave.

The unreasonableness of a demand for the retention of the "sick leave," the reason for withdrawing it, is found in the safety and security of employment secured by the civil-service laws, so recently reenforced by the President, who demands a strict enforcement; it is found in the short hours of from seven to eight worked each day; it is found in the reasonable and liberal pay the Government gives to the employees in the Executive Departments, and if further reason is needed it is found in the justice due to the Government and in economical administration due to the

the Government and in economical administration due to the people.

Mr. Chairman, in behalf of justice to all of the employees of the Government and in opposition to the special privileges granted to some in the Executive Departments here in Washington: in justice to the navy-yards of the country, to the arsenals, to the various employees who are denied this privilege in all parts of the country, I ask the House, and I ask the distinguished chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations to pass the bill which I introduced a short time ago and which is heca verba the present law, omitting the "sick leave," which corrects this inequality and endeavors to place all of the Government employees measurably upon an equal plane, no matter where they may be stationed ably upon an equal plane, no matter where they may be stationed or in what part of the country their services are needed. It is time to take the matter in hand.

I stated the other day that we had a Treasury that was full to overflowing, but at the same time many enterprises demand appropriations from it, and many of which should justly be provided for liberally by the General Government. With that condition of affairs prevailing, with the opportunity of retrenchment and betterment of the service, I ask that this Committee on Appropriations take action upon this matter.

I have the distinguished chairment of the committee, and he

I hope the distinguished chairman of the committee—and he eloquently said that he was in favor of repealing this thirty days' sick leave, "which is granted only to the employees of Washington"—I hope the distinguished chairman, with his energy and ability, will insist, before his committee, upon new legislation tending to remove this inequality permanently, and thus, without additional charge or burden to the Treasury, we will be able to give leave of absence in a proper time to all of the employees of the Government, whether in Washington or elsewhere; or that he will aid in the presentation to the House of the bill which I introduced and urge its consideration and adoption. In this way he will favor the adoption of a bill doing away with inequality and injustice; a law which will tend to secure justice to all the employees of the Government alike, with special privileges to none.

[Applause.]
Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sibley] has sounded "a note of warning" regarding the demand of the West that appropriate legislation should be adopted by Congress promoting the settlement of public lands in the settlement of public lands. in that region. Strange to say, the gentleman sounded this note upon a bill providing for the urgent deficiencies of the Government; a bill which attests the growing extravagances of the Government; a bill which provides a large appropriation for permanent fortifications in the Philippine Islands; a bill supplementing appropriations involving expenditures of at least $100,000,000 annually in the subjugation of those islands and the maintenance mularly in the subjugation of those Islands and the maintenance there of American supremacy; appropriations which the gentleman supports as a part of our external policy, a policy which, according to the recommendation of the Secretary of War, will involve the expenditure of at least $5,000,000 in the purchase of lands from the religious orders and their distribution amongst the Philippine people.

And upon this bill, attesting the liberality, the generosity, and the extravagance of the country in other directions, and which contains not a word on the subject of Western irrigation, the gentleman sounds, I repeat, a note of warning, raises the cry of "economy" in governmental expenditures, insists that our internal policy should be cramped and contracted so as to impair the development of the West, whose competition he fears in the raising of farm products, and with vivid imagination pictures a Western raid upon the National Treasury and the consequent imposition of additional burdens upon the taxpayers of the country. Reckless concerning extravagant expenditures abroad, he is concerned about reasonable development at home. He would at great expense expand our external empire whilst he would dwarf the Republic whose Western States form a part of that great Louisiana purchase the development of which has been the glory of the Republic and the crowning achievement of the century. Since the gentleman thus challenges Western sentiment and Western development, it becomes me as a Western man to

What, then, is the demand of the West? It is that the West should be enabled to reclaim itself, without taxing the Federal Treasury and without inflicting any burden upon the general taxpayer, by appropriate legislation dedicating the proceeds of the sales of the public lands in the arid region to the reclamation of arid lands, thus making the snow waters of that region, now running to waste, available for use by settlers under the homestead law, following the uniform policy of the country in the dedication of its public domain to the creators of homes, the settlers restoring to the realessation find the creat of the Govern tlers restoring to the reclamation fund the cost of the Government works in the price of their lands, thus creating a revolving fund from the sales of public lands in that region which can be used over and over again in the construction of irrigation works until all the waters now running to waste are beneficially utilized. Such is the bill which is recommended by the Western Senators representing 13 States and 3 Territories, a bill which guards against improvident expenditure by declaring that no contract for irrigation works shall be let until the moneys required for payment are in the fund, thus making the fund itself the limit of expenditure; a bill which guards against land monopoly by providing that the lands capable of irrigation shall be subject to entry only under the homestead law and limiting each entry to a tract not exceeding 160 acres or less than 40 acres, leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, taking into consid-eration the climate and the fertility and productiveness of the soil, to prescribe as an entry such area of land as will reasonably sup-

So this measure does not involve a raid upon the Federal Treas-It does not impose a burden upon the general taxpayers of the country. It simply involves the dedication of the lands of the West to the development of the West, and that has been the uniform policy of the country in the administration of its public

Now, what have been the public-land States of the Union? Why, all the States except the original 13. Those States were, in the early days of the Republic, in possession of the great Northwest Territory, out of which five additional States were subsequently carved. What was the policy of the people at that time? Was it to prevent settlement of the Northwest Territory, to present active of the public lands, to prevent the development of vent entry of the public lands, to prevent the development of those States? No; it was to promote settlement and development.

The farmers of that time did not raise the cry of "competition."

They were proud of their country—anxious for its development.

They knew that this great northwest country would furnish homes for their children and their children's children, and its development would mean the prosperity and the glory of the country, and so they promoted by a liberal policy the settlement of Ohio, Kentucky, and other great States.

And what did we do when we acquired the great territory of the Mississippi Valley under the Louisiana purchase, out of which so many magnificent States have been created—all of them publicland States, all of them embracing an area of public land capable of cultivation, many times greater than the acreage which, under the most favorable conditions, can be reclaimed in the arid West?

Why, sir, the policy there was to promote settlement and development. The homestead became the law of the country. The lands were given to settlers. Public lands were not then regarded, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have you regard them, as a pecuniary asset of the Government out of which every dollar should be wrung for the public Treasury. On the contrary, they were regarded as a great trust, to be administered for the present and future generations. And so they determined to promote home building, and they made—

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that the States that are now asking the reclamation of their arid lands were peculiarly the homestead law? As a matter of fact, the homestead act was passed in 1862. The Government has parted with nearly all of its lands—I say nearly all—in the State of Iowa, for example. And it was a very remote benefit, a very minor benefit, that came to the people of that State through the homestead law. Even as to the land grants for railways, alternate sections were given to the railway, and we had to pay double the minimum price for the remaining acres which were purchased from the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. So did the people in the Western States.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no. There were but few entries in Nebraska, in Kansas, in Colorado prior to 1862; so that the homestead law became operative at once for the benefit of your people, but not for the benefit of the somewhat older States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the railroads were constructed under the provisions of the laws of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. That was only a small portion of the aggre-

Mr. SHAFROTH. The great mass of the lands were commuted, by which the Treasury got money by not insisting upon five years' residence, but by granting the lands after fourteen months.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is true, as the gentleman says, that early in our land history these lands were sold, but they were sold at such reasonable prices as not to involve any burden upon And finally the policy was evolved of dedicating the the settlers. entire region to homesteads. A man by living upon the land for five years and cultivating it and making it his home could obtain title without payment, and he could secure a commutation of the homestead, as it was called, by the payment of $1.25 an acre at the end of fourteen months.

Now, the policy of the Government has been to administer this domain as a great trust for the settlement and development of this country. The gentleman's State, which, I believe, comprises this country. The gentleman's State, which, I believe, comprises more than 20,000,000 acres of land, was settled in this way. I ask the gentleman what is the acreage of his State?

Mr. HEPBURN. About 35,000,000 acres.
Mr. NEWLANDS. About 35,000,000 acres: 1 Mr. NEWLANDS. About 35,000,000 acres; more acres of land than can by any possibility be reclaimed in the arid West in thirty years; and yet the great State of Iowa, with 35,000,000 acres, equal to one-half of the total area which can by any possibility be reclaimed, was opened up to settlement in competition with the other States. I repeat that 35,000,000 acres is one-half of the total area which can by any possibility be reclaimed in the arid West, for, while there are 600,000,000 acres of public lands in the arid region, the calculation of all the experienced and scientific men who have investigated the subject is that there is no water available for more than 70,000,000 acres, and that it will take generations to accomplish the work of reclaiming this area, thus graduating the settlement to the pressing needs of ever-increasing

The gentleman's State, then, comprises one-half of the entire reclaimable area of the arid region, and it is watered from the heavens. This land was opened up to settlement in competition heavens. with the thirteen original States, in competition with the five States that were carved out of the Northwest Territory, in competition with sister States in the South and West, and yet complaint is made because we ask this country to inaugurate an automatic system which will lead to the ultimate reclamation of only double the number of acres in Iowa in a period of fifty—perhaps one hun-

And if the acreage in Iowa had no disastrous competitive effect upon the country, but if, as we all agree, on the contrary, its development led to the growth and prosperity of the country, I will ask you what the acreage of Missouri, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, the two Dakotas, and the acreage lately entered in Oklahoma means in competition? Why, gentlemen, you have opened up in

Oklahoma within the last few years more land capable of being watered from the heavens than can by any possibility under this bill be reclaimed in the arid region in many years.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes. Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I understand that the proposition agreed upon by your committee was to give to all the States interested—that is, the Western States having arid lands—the proceeds of the public lands of the United States located in those What I desire to say to the gentleman is this, and then I will ask him a question:

My recollection is that the Morrill bill provided for appropriations for agricultural and mechanical colleges from the proceeds that were to be derived from these lands in those States. If that is so, what effect will this proposed legislation have upon those appropriations in the future?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman correctly states that the Morrill bill provided an appropriation of about twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars, I believe, for each agricultural college in the country, payable out of the proceeds of public lands. As a matter of fact, howver, Congress has gone on and appropriated those moneys out of the General Treasury; but in this bill we have provided that the dedication of the proceeds of the sales of public lands in that region to the work of reclamation shall not affect the beneficial operation of that act; that the proceeds of the public lands outside of these 16 arid and semiarid States and Territories shall be appropriated for that purpose, and that if there is not sufficient, then the annual appropriations to those institutions shall be a charge upon the General Treasury.

I can not inform the gentleman to what extent the proceeds of the sale of public lands outside of these 16 States and Territories will be sufficient to meet the wants of these institutions, but I think they will largely contribute to them. At all events, the purpose of this bill is to preserve to those institutions their present annual appropriation.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I call the gentleman's attention to a fact with reference to that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes. Mr. BARTLETT. When what was known as the "free-homes Mr. BARTLETT. When what was known as the "free-homes bill" was passed in the last Congress, there was an amendment to that law which provided that in the event that the proceeds from that law which provided that in the event that the proceeds from the sale of the public lands should not be sufficient to keep up the appropriation made by the Morrill bill to these agricultural colleges, or if that fund should be diverted, then the colleges should be paid their proportion out of the General Treasury.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Out of the General Treasury?
Mr. BARTLETT. That is the legislation as it now exists.
Mr. NEWLANDS. So that our bill merely perpetuates the legislation which exists now, which was passed on the Oklahoma bill and which is ample to protect all the agricultural colleges of bill, and which is ample to protect all the agricultural colleges of the country.

Now, gentlemen, let me explain the provisions of the bill which has been agreed upon by the Senators and Representatives from these 16 States and Territories, aggregating between 50 and 60 in number. They have agreed that the proceeds of the sales of pubnumber. They have agreed that the proceeds of the sales of public lands in these States—in the arid and semiarid States—shall be put into a special fund in the Treasury, to be called the "arid land reclamation fund."

They then give the Secretary of the Interior the power to go on and construct irrigation works and to permit entries under the homestead law of lands that can be irrigated from those works. It prevents him, however, from entering into any contract unless the money for its payment is in the fund. No indebtedness whatever can be contracted and no obligations can be assumed which will in any way threaten the Federal Treasury. Then it provides that settlers can enter upon these lands and occupy them in areas not exceeding 160 acres and not less than 40 acres, thus securing and dedicating that entire region to homes for the people; not for the people who now live there, but for your people—people in the East, people in the Middle West, people in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Illinois, and other States who want to go farther west.

These lands are not appropriated for the benefit of the people there, except so far as each individual can avail himself of the act and secure a home; nor do the proceeds go to the States. The proceeds of the sales of public lands in those States are dedicated and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury for all time to do this work. The trust is to be administered as a national trust, by the National Government, and the public domain is to be regarded as a unit regardless of State lines. Each large watershed is to be regarded as a unit regardless of State lines, and the purpose of the Government, as the owner of the public lands, is simply to do such work as will render the waters available for the lands that can be reclaimed.

Now, recollect the area of settlement is rapidly diminishing. The pressure of the population in the West for new homes and new farms is very great. You all know what happened in Oklaloma, where millions of acres of land were opened. Public notices were given, and people desirous of securing homes rushed to the boundary line in order to avail themselves of the benefit of the act; and Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, said a while ago in a speech: "You need have no fear that these arid lands will not be settled if water is made available. The farmers' sons of Iowa, who are now going to the British Dominion for the purpose of securing farms from the public domain, will go out into that region and settle it up." So that this involves no question of the Federal Treasury, no taxing of the general taxpayers, but simply pursues the general policy of the Government in making this land available for the homes of the great masses of the people.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman, who has made a careful study of this which has come to be a burning question. Why would it not be better that you should formulate a plan by which the General Government surrender to the States the public lands within their respective domains, and then let the State legislatures provide for this general system of irrigation, without the United States being a party to it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The reason why we have not shaped the bill on the lines of cession to the States of the lands within their boundaries is because the sentiment of the country has formulated itself against it, and that sentiment of the country finds its expression in both the Democratic and Republican national platforms, both of which declare for a national system of reclama-tion and for the preservation of these lands for homes of actual settlers. And another reason—
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman permit me to

Mr. W.M. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?
Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.
Mr. W.M. ALDEN SMITH. Does that statement imply that irrigation is to be taken out of the field of private enterprise?
Mr. NEWLANDS. No.
Mr. W.M. ALDEN SMITH. How much broader interpretation is there gives?

is there given?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me explain the nature of the Government work. The Government's work is to prevent the flood waters of these streams from being wasted. As it is, the water of that region is entirely supplied by the snow, which falls in the winter and melts suddenly in April, May, or June, precipitating a torrent in the streams. If the river happens to be tributary to a parigable stream those waters rush down and increase the flow. a navigable stream, those waters rush down and increase the flow in the navigable streams; and that is one of the causes of the great floods in the Missouri and Mississippi rivers.

You will protect the banks of these rivers as much by storage of these waters in the mountains as you will by building these immense levees to protect the adjoining lands from overflow. the rivers are not tributary to the great navigable streams, but find their outlet in the great lakes, such as Salt Lake, in the sink of the desert, they there make great inland seas that serve no purpose except to satisfy the thirst of the sun. We propose that these waters shall be put to a beneficial use by indissolubly joining the water and the land, and we insist that the Government as the owner of the land has the right and power and it is its duty to make these waters so available as to facilitate the settlers in making actual reclamation.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is it your proposition to take the

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is it your proposition to take the surplus water from these streams?

Mr. NEWLANDS. As a rule, throughout that entire region there exist State laws for the appropriations of water; but the settler must not consider simply the condition of the stream from which he gets his water supply, in the months of April and May, but must consider what it will be in the month of July, when the river is a mere thread and when water is most needed; so that the limitation of production is not the condition of the river in the torrential season, but at the period of least flow. It should be the purpose of the Government to conserve the flood waters of the mountain tributaries of the Missouri and Mississippi waters of the mountain tributaries of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, as well as the flood waters of the nonnavigable streams which empty into these great inland lakes in the lowest part of the desert, and hold them in suspense in reservoirs in the mountains, so that they can be let down during the period of scarcity and thus render a large area capable of cultivation.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does the gentleman from Nevada think that we have a right to divert the streams?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Undoubtedly. The United States Government has every right that any proprietor of land has, and the right is unquestioned in that region, for the doctrine of riparian rights does not prevail there. The right is unquestioned to appropriate water and to put it to a beneficial use, that beneficial use being the measure limit and basis of his right; but if the appropriator of water neglects the beneficial use of that water, the abandoned water goes back to the general stream for the use of those who do wish to put it to a beneficial use.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It seems to me this should be

Mr. W.M. AIDEN SMITH. It seems to me this should be done with the cooperation of the State.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, if State cooperation is desired or needed, it will be forthcoming; because the people throughout that entire region realize that it is a matter that the State can not efficiently undertake, because of the limits of the State boundaries. Take the tributaries of the Missouri River; it has its sources in three or four different States, and treatment of the river and its watershed must be under one control.

The snows that fall and supply the water may be in one State and the flat lands that can be reclaimed may be in an adjoining State through which the waters flow. The State, therefore, can not operate outside of its own boundaries, and it will be impossible for it to treat the river as a unit and develop every one of its tributaries for the purpose of preventing the torrential floods, creating a constant flow, and securing thus the highest beneficial use of the water. use of the water.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The point I make is that the National Government, if it invades a State and diverts the flow of the river, must have the consent of the State to do it. I wonder if that will be forthcoming.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That will be done by every State that hopes to avail itself of Government work. We simply enact into law the recognized doctrine of that entire region, that beneficial use shall be the basis measure and limit of the right to water. The United States Government, like any individual or corporation and the laws of the States are replaced to the states. tion under the laws of the State, can make appropriations of water and lead it off into reservoirs or through ditches to the lands to be reclaimed.

Now, I wish to show that this bill does not propose that the Federal Government shall itself reclaim the lands. All that the bill provides for is that the Government shall make the waters available, so that the settlers, either individually or by coopera-tion, can get at them, lead them over the lands, and upon them will be devolved the labor and cost of actual reclamation. labor and cost itself is very large. So that the cost to the settler is not only the moneys he must expend in making the ditches and subditches on his own land and for the ditch connecting with the high-line ditch or the reservoir constructed by the Government, but he is to pay, in at least ten annual installments, back to the reclamation fund his proportionate part of the cost of the Government work, and no title to the land entered vests in him until his proportionate part is paid as the price of the land.

So this fund is kept as a revolving fund, and the moneys in it are being constantly applied to the construction of new irrigation works.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If it does not interrupt the gentleman, I would like to ask another question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Passing through Arizona and New Mexico recently, I observed that large tracts of land were being made available for cultivation and for grazing by private enter-

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I know that for a considerable time we passed through a very rich portion of country, and I inquired who was the owner of that large tract of land which seemed to be fenced off and prosperous, and some one told me it was the Maxwell grant, which has been watered entirely by pri-vate enterprise. What I desire to know is, in accordance with the demands of the country and the necessity for the cultivation of these lands, whether or not private enterprise will not be equal to the occasion and give us these lands whenever a necessity calls for it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That condition of things is fully met by the President of the United States in his message. He states there, if my recollection is right, unequivocally, that the limitation of

if my recollection is right, unequivocally, that the limitation of private enterprise has been nearly reached, and that the important question of to-day is the preservation of the forests and the conservation of the flood waters, and that that can efficiently be done by the Government alone.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do not wish to be misunderstood in what I have said, but I do not want to see any part of the country neglected by private enterprise, and I do not want it to be neglected by the Government if it is the better opinion that the Government should develop it. It seems to me private enterprise is taking hold of Arizona and New Mexico and has done much which will result to the advantage of the country.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is no question but that private enterprise is taking hold of this thing to the extent of its ability. There is no doubt that upon streams where there was no settlement, where the river was bank full, where there was no gorge ment, where the river was bank full, where there was no gorge to prevent the taking out the water and carrying it over the land, where the proposition was easy and simple, the settler could make a ditch, take the water upon his land, and in the original condition of the rivers, with the torrential flow in the spring and the scanty flow in the summer months, it was possible for him to get his supply for the entire period of cultivation.

But each additional entry of land and appropriation of water would diminish the capacity of the stream at the period of lowest flow, and when the capacity of the stream at its period of lowest flow—not highest—was exhausted, that meant a limitation upon the area of development, and it was necessary then to enter upon the work of storing these flood waters, holding them on tap in the mountains, the mountains perhaps of another State, mountains far distant.

Now, who is the owner of these unsettled and unoccupied inds? The people of those States? No. The settlers in those tates? No. The Government is the owner of 600,000,000 acres States? No. The Government is the owner of 600,000,000 acres of land there, of which only 70,000,000 are capable of reclamation. The existing water settlers have exhausted the water at the period of lowest flow, and the question is now how to maintain these rivers in an equal and sustained flow, and that can only be done scientifically, economically, and with the best results by the Government of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman state it as his fixed opinion that it is beyond the power of the States to reclaim those lands by the process of irrigation when they are reenforced by grants of the lands within their boundaries by the General Government?

General Government?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I mean to say that there would not be such a development of that region as is required by the future of this country and the pressing demand of the people and the pressure of population; that it would be the abandonment of a trust if the Government of the United States should surrender to each State

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Have not millions of money been invested in those enterprises successfully? Are not the securities of the companies engaged in these enterprises eagerly sought? Are not California and Colorado to-day Gardens of Eden by reason of irrigation, which has followed the expenditure of millions and millions of money by the States?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true in some localities, but not many. On the contrary, the San Joaquin Valley, in California, has long since reached the limits of the capacity of its rivers at the period of lowest flow, and there are thousands of acres in that region that are becoming worthless because they can not get a region that are becoming worthless because they can not get a sufficient supply of water to perfect their crops.

Mr. PALMER. Is it not true that nine-tenths of the private irrigation companies have gone into bankruptcy?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very many have, and I will state one reason for that. You can never make an irrigation enterprise profitable unless you tie the land and water together and enable the corporation to apply its water to its land; and to carry that on successfully there must be a very large area of land. The reservoir may be 150 miles from the point where the water will ultimately be used. The river is simply the medium of communications.

voir may be 150 miles from the point where the water will ultimately be used. The river is simply the medium of communication, the channel through which the stored water is carried.

Now, no irrigation company would be justified in going into these irrigation schemes without getting the control of large areas of land. And what does that mean? It means that the Government must grant such corporations large tracts of land. It means land monopoly. It means the concentration of these large areas of land in the hands of corporations or individual appears. It means all the express of proportions schemes of discovery. owners. It means all the expenses of promotion schemes, of disowners. It means an the expenses of promotion schemes, of discount upon bonds and stocks and interest charges, and it involves the effort to secure a large profit ultimately for the promoters. Besides that, it opens up the machinery by which these lands will be concentrated into large holdings. We have suffered in that region from the monopoly of the lands.

that State was entered up in tracts of 160 acres. But California was the victim of the land-grant system of Mexico. Grants were made there which were recognized as valid by the Federal Government involving 50,000 and 100,000 acres. There is not a man in California who does not know how the ownership of those large tracts has steadily retarded the progress and development of the State. It would be a mistake for our country to follow the example of Mexico in making large grants of land. Our policy should be to promote home building by actual settlers.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. As I understand, no bill has yet heep reported by any committee on this subject?

yet been reported by any committee on this subject?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman expect that a bill satisfactory to the representatives of the arid lands will be reported during this session?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I hope so. I expect so.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman whether, in case such a bill is reported and ample opportunity for its consideration and discussion should be given in the House, he will abide by the result of the action of the House and not undertake later on to fight this question upon appropriation bills?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, I do not propose to give any assurances regarding my legislative course in this body. I shall meet each question as it arises. I will say that my indvidual view is that if both the political parties repudiate the pledges given to the West in their platforms, if the Republican party proposes to deny the reasonable suggestions made by the President of the United States, all of which are in line with the sentiment of the West and the proper development of the country, I think the men representing that section would be justified in taking any course they may deem advisable in order to force upon Congress the consideration of the subject and appropriate legislation.

And, furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman that this discussion was not precipitated by members from the Western region. We had proposed to go along in an orderly way and present our matter before the committee having jurisdiction, and allow them to make their report after full consideration, and and present our matter before the committee having jurisdiction, allow them to make their report after full consideration, and then ask the consideration of the reported bill by the House. We have been compelled heretofore to practice a kind of guerrilla warfare in the House for the purpose of getting a hearing before the country. But our disposition, now that we have a full opportunity to proceed in an orderly way, is to get a report from the proper committee and obtain consideration in the House in the result way. We believe that when this is done there will be the proper committee and obtain consideration in the House in the usual way. We believe that when this is done there will be no difficulty in the way of securing legislation.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sibley] proceeded to discuss the question this morning before any presentation of our case to the House, and in remarks which were likely to induce the members of the House to prejudge the case, and in that speech, if I may be permitted to say so, he presented a prejudiced and distorted statement of the case, a statement appealing to the prejudices of the House and appealing to the interests of other sections as against the West rather than to high patriotism and proper regard to the development of the en-tire country, both West and East.

Now, I ask the members of this House not to permit themselves to form a premature judgment on this great question or to allow themselves to be affected by casual statements intended to arouse sectional opposition. It will come up for discussion in the House upon the bill which will be properly presented by a committee, and I hope that every man here will come with an open and unprejudiced mind to its consideration; and if that be the case I can not doubt the result of the calm and thoughtful deliberation of the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, for the past thirty days a committee, consisting of one member of Congress from each of the arid and semiarid States of the Union, has been considering and preparing a bill, the object of which is to invoke Federal aid in the irrigation of some of our arid and semiarid lands in the West. Last evening that committee reported to the full membership from the West the result of their labors and investigations in the form of a bill, which was introduced this morning in both Houses, and in due course of time we hope that bill may be reported to the House for its consideration and action.

Now, it occurs to me that this is not the time to discuss the questions which that bill presents, but I hope and trust that some ime in the no distant future the Committee on Rules of this House may see fit to give us an opportunity to present the bill which may be reported from the committee to the House; and at that time it is expected that the provisions of the bill will be fully explained and discussed. At that time, Mr. Chairman, it is expected that an opportunity for a full and free debate on this subject will be given to all of the members of the House—an opportunity commensurate with the importance of the question which is presented, and for one, I have full confidence, so far as this side of the House is concerned, that the pledge of the Republican party in its last national platform would be fulfilled, and the suggestion of the President of the United States in reference to this matter in his annual message will be carefully considered and adopted by the House.

As I stated a few moments ago, I do not believe this is a proper time to enter into a discussion of the merits of the measure we propose to bring to the attention of Congress. But I wish to appeal to gentlemen, on this side of the House at least, not to prejudge the case.

I wish to appeal to my Republican colleagues to reserve their judgment with reference to this matter until the bill has been properly presented to the House, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, in the meantime, that each and every one of them will examine that bill and all of its provisions carefully. We believe that the bill as drawn safeguards the interests of the country and of the people, and at the same time its enactment into a law will settle, at least to a very considerable extent, one of the great questions now be-of the great arid portion of our country.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sibley] this morning, without, in my opinion, having considered the question carefully, without, in my opinion, having considered the question carefully, certainly without a careful consideration of the provisions of the bill which is proposed, suggests that the measure as presented to the House will have the effect of immediately opening up to settlement and cultivation vast areas of land, the products of which would be brought into direct competition with the products of other portions of the country. That, as I understand it, is practically the position taken by the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, there have been several five-year periods in the history of our country since the enactment of the homestead law when more lands have come under the plow than could possibly be brought under cultivation by means of this bill, if it be enacted into law, and by individual enterprise in irrigation reclamation within the next twenty or thirty years.

Furthermore, the arid region does not produce generally and to

Furthermore, the arid region does not produce generally and to a very considerable extent the great staple products of the country. It does not and never will produce any great amount of corn. It does not and, in my opinion, never will produce enough wheat to supply the wants of the region itself. The products of that region will be, in the north, largely grasses, to bring the steers of the adjacent ranges to that condition where they can be shived to the great core region. shipped to the great corn-raising States to be fattened for the market. In the south these lands will produce tropical and semi-tropical fruits and other products, which, instead of coming into competition with other portions of our country, will supply many articles which we now import and for which we pay large sums of money to foreigners.

I will not trespass upon the time of the House further to go into a discussion of the question of irrigation. I believe that the American people are inclined at this time to listen to the arguamerican people are inclined at this time to fisten to the arguments which we will have to make. I believe when this measure is presented to this Congress the House will give the question fair consideration, and I am confident that the measure which we will present will commend itself to this Congress; and I ask this side of the House at least to reserve its judgment until the great questions involved shall have been presented to it in the ordinary course of business course of business.

Mr. KERN. Mr. Chairman, in the course of his eloquent and able remarks, delivered on this floor yesterday, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of this House, my esteemed colleague from Illinois, made what seemed to me the surprising statement that the army which this country has in the Philippine Islands at this time is there for the purpose of protecting life and property. If that be true our army is entitled to the respect, the admiration, and the applause of all mankind. Unless it were fighting for the preservation of human liberty itself no army on the certh ever carried arms in a holier cause nor for a worthing. the earth ever carried arms in a holier cause nor for a worthier object. Human life should be held sacred everywhere. The rights of property involve the holiest rights of man.

But, in my opinion, my esteemed colleague has inadvertently misconceived and misstated the facts as they really exist in this But, in my opinion, my esteemed colleague has inadvertently misconceived and misstated the facts as they really exist in this case. Our army, it seems to me, is in the Philippine Islands for a directly contrary purpose to that alleged by the gentleman from Illinois. It is there primarily not to protect human life, but to take it. It is there not to protect property, but to destroy it. It is there to shed blood. It is there to strike down men. There is no use in mincing words about this matter. It is there to kill. It is there to tear down, to lay waste, to devastate, and to burn houses and barns, and factories and mills, and courthouses, and state houses and churches, if it becomes necessary in the prosecution of its work. By what standard of right, by what recognized authority, in what well-defined cause is this work of human slaughter and destruction of property carried on?

What have the inhabitants of those islands done to kindle the mighty flames of our consuming wrath? What unpardonable crime have they been guilty of in their relations with us, distant neighbors which they have always been, of no kith and of no kin to us, living there thousands of miles from our shores, almost total strangers in their intercourse with us?

If history speaks the truth—if our own official records tell the

If history speaks the truth—if our own official records tell the truth—the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands have never asked the people of this country nor the people of any other country for anything but the recognition of their right to be independent and free, and to be let alone in the peaceful and undisturbed enjoyment of their independence and their liberty. [Applause.] Holier war for holier cause was never waged in the history of our race than the war which this country waged against the country of Spain. That war was the indignant protest of the free men of the nineteenth century, hurled into the face of surviving monarchy in its last gasps in Europe, and it was notice duly served on monarchical institutions that its days on earth are numbered. bered. It was a war for liberty. It was a fight for the rights of man. It was a battle against tyranny. It was a successful strug-gle against oppression. It was a command uttered in thunder tones for the robber to halt and stop the unholy work of despoiling the people. And in this war, and until the word victory had been inscribed on our triumphant banners, and until the smoke of the last gun fired in the name of liberty and justice and the rights of man had cleared away, the men on these islands were willing to fight side by side with the gallant soldiers of our Republic in the same holy cause; and they did fight side by side with them until the laurels were won, and their women and their little children cheered them on, and they cheered our boys on as they fought for freedom, justice, and for right. [Applause.] They never asked Spain anything but the right to be independent and free. They begged Spain to quit robbing them. ent and free. They begged Spain to quit robbing them. They implored their mother country for the right to construct and manage a government for themselves. They asked for freedom to think, freedom to speak, and freedom to print, liberty of conscience, personal liberty, the right to stand up with their heads erect—in short, the right to be men. [Applause.]

They are making the same demands on us which they made on

We are answering them in the same words and the same spirit in which old Spain answered them. Wrapped in the cloak of a hypocritical and unreal civilization, untrue to every tradition of our great Republic, actuated by the base motives of selfishness and cupidity, utterly disregardful of our own direct and tacit promises, we arrogate to ourselves the right to take their lives, destroy their property, and lay waste their country unless they consent to bend and bow to the dictation of our imperial, arbitrary, conquering will.

We are wrong in our war in the Philippine Islands. We might
The world as well be candid and admit that melancholy fact. The world knows it anyhow. We know it. We are clearly conscious of our guilt, for the voice of our conscience, try we ever so hard, we can neither stifle nor suppress. It will speak out. It will tell the truth in spite of ourselves and forbid all self-deception. The two greatest nations of the earth to-day are engaged in fighting the two unholiest wars of all history. They pretend to be the freest. They are the proudest. Let them beware that they sow not the seeds of national disintegration. Let them beware of the day of reckoning that must be sure to follow in its train and mark the end of such a mistaken course.

We are told that we have assumed obligations in the Philippine Islands, by the signing of the Spanish treaty, which make it our duty to stay in the islands and to subjugate the inhabitants by duty to stay in the islands and to subjugate the inhabitants by force of arms. A free republic can assume no obligation to oppress. When it assumes the rôle of tyrant and of taskmaster, that moment it ceases to be a republic in all but name. Fidelity to the principles of the equal liberty of men and the equal rights of men must be the guiding star of a free people in a republic. Those who assume the right to make that kind of treaties for a republic are recreant to their trust as representatives of the people, and they are false to its principles, and in the eyes of the honest and right-thinking patriot and of the really free man the contract is not worth the paper it is written on.

We are furthermore told that those humble people are not competent to govern themselves. No other just form of government than a form of self-government is possible on earth. But assuming, for the sake of argument, that they are not competent to govern themselves, and I deny the proposition that they are not, then where and when did we acquire the skill and experience so essential in governing distant peoples, thousands of miles away from our shores, of a different race and breed, of different habits and our shores, of a different race and breed, of different habits and standards of life, of different history and traditions, speaking an alien and to us unintelligible language? We are only just embarking on that sort of enterprises, and we can not be said to have made a howling success of it so far as we have gone. Our great captains of statesmanship have all taught us that it could not possibly be done. Their common verdict is that no man is good enough to govern another man; that all just government rests primarily and ultimately upon consent and not upon force and primarily and ultimately upon consent and not upon force, and that all nations have an inalienable right to be independent and free.

They tell us that if we withdraw our troops from the islands and permit those people to realize their high ideal in their passionate yearning and fond desire for freedom and independent selfgovernment, and give them our solemn benediction to the sweet music of falling fetters, that some other nation will assume the music of failing fetters, that some other nation will assume the rôle which we are playing now and will gobble the islands up, extend the hand of despotism over them, and despoil their people.

If that were true, then the guilt at least for the atrocious crime is not on our heads. Then, at least, we have washed our hands clean of this bloody business. We will keep our treasures at home, to be expended for useful purposes, and we will keep our boys at home with their families and at their firesides. We will cease in honor, as far as we are concerned, the work of dastardly killing and wanton destruction. But American manhood and American valor and unconquerable American resolution will issue the command to the land-grabbing, greedy, despoiling nations of the earth to leave hands off, and none will dare to take them nor to crook a single hair on any Filipino's head. That argument re-solves itself in plain words into the coward's wincing wail. It is a pure fabrication, a cringing subterfuge, a false prophecy. America would not permit that thing to be done which it is predicted would be done by the other nations. One resolute word from the city of Washington, coming from the right quarters, would prevent it forever and prevent it effectually. The com-mand "Thou shalt not" would go forth, and it would be heeded now and in the future, as it has been heeded on several note-

We have made a mistake with respect to the seizing and the attempted subjugation of these islands, and we ought to have the honor, and the manhood, and the courage, and the candor, and the principle to correct that fatal mistake. Instead of the American nation entering on a career of detestable oppression the American heart should find a permanent abiding place wherever on this earth a people yearns for liberty and nerves its arm to strike brave blows in its defense. It is never too late to mend. We should call this business off, and we should call our boys home. In the language of the silent commander, "Let us have peace." [Applause,] home. In the language of the silent commander, Let us have peace." [Applause.]

One more subject has been injected into this debate, on which I ask the indulgence of this House. It is the subject of sending special envoys, a delegation of men from this country to attend the coronation ceremonies of England's new King. I have no objection to England's crowning this man as her King, if the English nation sees fit to do so. But I will say that it is wrong to take the appearance of any crowd of official factors. American people to pay the expenses of any crowd of official favorites chosen to go there to be present and to represent the American people at this "blow-out." That is the concern of this House, and this House should proudly and manfully refuse to House, and this House should proudly and manfully refuse to appropriate one dollar of the American people's money for this unnecessary and ignoble purpose. A self-respecting American, I take it, does not want to shine at such a function. No other kind of American should be permitted to do so as the accredited representative of this country at the expense of the American people. If he wants to go there on his own hook and pay his own bills like a man, let him go, and I bid him Godspeed on the voyage and wish him a glorious good time during the course of the entire gigantic spree. gigantic spree.

The American people are not admirers of the personality of England's King. American mothers do not ask their sons to emulate his unenviable life conduct. They do not admire his emulate his unenviable life conduct. They do not admire his example. They do not regard his character as a fit model for imitation. But I have no desire to pry any deeper into this unmitation. But I have no desire to pry any deeper into this unsavory phase of the subject. I want to say that the system of government which he represents and of which he is the embodiment, the American people, taken as a whole, much as they respect and love the common people of England, despise and detest; the idea of kingcraft, of monarchy, of rule by assumed divine right, of princes, of a titled nobility, of gilded crowns on empty heads. The idea is entirely repugnant to their idea of government.

The American people esteem true worth, laurels won by brave fighting in fields of useful and elevating activity. According to their humble notion, the humblest citizen is better than a king so long as he leads an honorable and useful life, and does not try to encroach on the liberties of others, and every American woman to encroach on the liberties of others, and every American woman is better than any queen that ever wore a jeweled diadem, and before whom fawning courtiers have stooped to kiss the earth, and gold bespangled panderers have buried their bended knees in dust. [Applause.] I despise the very name of king in what that term implies in a monarchy, and in the same sense the word queen is hateful to me. It stands not for liberty, for virtue, for nobility of character, but the accidents of birth do win the kingly and the queenly crown.

We hear a great deal of talk on this floor about mother country. If England ever was our mother country she was a brutal and inhuman stepmother, indeed. She held us by the throat and throttled us until we threw her off with scorn and indignation at the mouth of thundering cannon and at the sword's keen point. at the mouth of thundering cannon and at the sword's keen point. The great majority of our people are neither English nor of English extraction, and those who are have no sympathy with English monarchical rule. They are Irish, German, French, Italian, Russian, yea African, and they are of Irish, German, French, Italian, Russian, and African extractions. These other countries are our mother countries, too, and each and every one of them has been kinder to us in dealing with us than old England ever was. They talk of common language common literature common art and talk of common language, common literature, common art, and common customs. We are the heirs of all the good and great who have wrought anything in art and literature in all the countries of this earth.

We owe nothing to the kings and nobles of any country. We owe all we are and hope to be to the efforts of the plain and common people. [Applause.] England's King is this day at the head of the Government which is engaged in murdering republicanism and liberty in South Africa. He is at the head of the system that is vainly trying to destroy the brave Boers whose highest ambition in life is to establish in South Africa a government modeled after the Government of Washington and Jefferson and Lincoln. The dastardly work which he is carrying on there in the wholesale slaughter of the innocents should be enough to deter this Government from participating officially in the coronation ceremonies of King Edward, aside from all other reasons. That work alone should furnish us with good and sufficient reason to refuse to participate through the agency of special envoys as a Government in the hollow mockery of that ceremony. [Loud applause.]

[Mr. GAINES of Tennessee addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, it is with diffidence and without hope of results here and now that I ask indulgence to speak upon the subject to which I shall address myself and which is presented by the pending deficiency bill. I shall confine myself to the item making an appropriation of $500,000 to establish a military post in the Philippine Islands. I am well aware that the subject of our relations with the Philippines has been thoroughly and repeatedly discussed before Congress and throughout the country and that the policy of government has at last been definitely made known. I know that I subject myself to the same criticism that was made on yesterday of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. De Armond when he was told that all of this had been thrashed out in the Presidential campaign by the advocates of the Democratic party and was decided adversely to them at the polls by the people of the United States. Nevertheless, I desire to be heard briefly. The party of the Administration in power has gone too far already to reverse its course even if it could be convinced of error—a course that in my judgment is wrong and unjustifiable. Nevertheless, I must avail myself of the opportunity to enter one more protest in behalf of the Republic and safe and just government; a protest against wrong and injustice; against imperiling our own liberties by assailing the liberties of others.

We listened yesterday to gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, and with especial interest to the very able chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Cannon], while they spoke upon this item of the bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], with the enthusiastic earnestness which invariably characterizes his utterances, made the assertion that the flag of the United States was planted in the Philippines to float there forever, and even for a day longer than forever, and he asserted a doctrine which has long been stoutly denied by his colleagues—that the Constitution is there with the flag. It is maintained that the Constitution is there for some purposes and absent for others. When the Constitution can be so construed as to justify the ambitious schemes of the Republican party, it is there. It is not there when it palpably stands in the way of those schemes. But the gentleman seemed almost overcome by the fervor of tender philanthropy while tremulous and agitated and with tearful voice he described how the glorious Constitution would enfold in its protecting arms the islanders—a people incapable of self-control—and give them the benign blessing of American protection and guidance and so much of self-government as they are capable of exercising. He even gave expression to the hope that at some time in the distant nebulous future, with the building of churches and schoolhouses, the education by American teachers—and by his leave I add the payment of American taxes—they may reach a point where they may govern themselves.

But in the meantime the Army must be maintained to enforce upon them the inestimable privilege of our unselfish protection. We are asked now to take the money of the people to establish permanent military posts in the Philippines, and I can not, without comment and protest, see the Government take this step, which commits us to the policy of holding the Philippines permanently as a colony, to be governed by military power without the consent of the inhabitants, contrary to the spirit of our own institutions, and against the wish of a very large part of the people of the United States. [Applause.] On a former occasion, when legislation was pending for the annexation of Hawaii and it was insisted by the majority that possession of those islands was necessary for a military outpost to secure and guard our trade, I myself predicted that it was but the beginning and that ere long we would be asked to take and hold the Philippines also, and to keep a standing Army there. There were none so bold as to admit it then. Indeed, if we could have persuaded the opposition to make a declaration on the subject it would probably have been an indignant denial. But to-day we see it has come to pass. If money is necessary to provide for the comfort and health of our soldiers in those distant islands—in that wretched, sickly clime—appropriate it, expend it and welcome, but we refuse to consent that it shall be for a permanent military establishment. The soldiers are ours; men who enlisted to fight for freedom, not for conquest, but, being enlisted, must obey orders from their superiors. They are not responsible if wrong is done by their agency. They are in the islands and must be cared for.

But if they are not sooner or later withdrawn the Administration in power will have imperiled their lives in a service fraught with wrong to the islanders and danger to our own country. But "the flag is there forever," and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] repeatedly declared these are to be "permanent" military posts. Before the treaty of Paris was ratified no one in this House would admit for the Republican party an intention of permanently occupying the Philippines. I for one never for a moment doubted their purpose to do so, but they were not candid enough to assert it. In vain did we try to get some assurance from them. At that time they did not dare to confront the people with the assertion that they intended to hold those islanders against their will under a perpetual colonial government; under the flag for military purposes, without the Constitution for purposes of taxation and local government. I have a distinct remembrance of members on this side in those discussions repeatedly endeavoring to elicit from our opponents what their purpose was, but always with failure. They were always met by the general assertion that the Republican party could be relied upon, when the responsibility was imposed upon it, to do that which was proper and right.

Mr. Chairman, once more let me speak a word in behalf of the principles of government which throughout our past history were recognized as just and those that should obtain. Once more I desire to lift my voice for the Declaration of Independence, for constitutional government as it was recognized for more than a hundred years.

It avails not to tell us that the people have decided against us on the issues involved in a campaign. A campaign does not settle issues for all time. The people sometimes err and afterwards correct their error. The question of imperialism was no more settled by the campaign of 1900 than was the doctrine of protection by the campaign of 1892, when, on that issue, the Republican party was displaced and Democracy installed in power. Fortunately, under American institutions, the people have the right to speak as they believe at all times, and to declare convictions as to what the honor of the country and the welfare of the people demand.

The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] has spoken in terms of the highest consideration of the different peoples with whom we are in treaty relation in the world, and pathetically about our duty to the Filipinos. He affectionately gathers them within the arms of the Constitution; but it remains a cold and cruel fact that under a Republican government, which for more than a century has asserted that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, we are now engaged in establishing a military despotism over an unwilling people, who fought and bled with our soldiers in the common cause of liberty, denying to them the constitutional privileges that everybody who claims the protection of the American flag has a right to ask for himself.

of liberty, denying to them the constitutional privileges that everybody who claims the protection of the American flag has a right to ask for himself.

The people of America have no cause to be infatuated with colonial government and perpetuate it. It was in resistance of those who sought to impose it that we had our national birth. It was in resistance of the idea that any people could usurp to them selves superiority over us and claim that they had a better understanding of what was good for us than we had for ourselves, and the right to impose upon us discriminating burdens which their own people did not have to share in, that the most glorious revolution of all history was fought, and the one most fruitful of beneficent results that bore the fruit of a great Republic which has distanced all other nations in the rapidity of its advance to the fullness of prosperity, greatness, and power. We to-day are doing to the people of the Philippine Islands exactly what England proposed to do for us, and which our fathers prevented her from doing by the most devoted patriotic sacrifices that any people had ever endured for liberty up to that time ever endured for liberty up to that time.

Proud memory of our national past should stay our hand. When we look at what has resulted from colonial government under European monarchies, we have that which should deter us from entering upon it for ourselves. Let us but glance at Ireland, which to-day is but a colony of Britain and is denied home rule; Ireland, whose people have furnished to civilization bright examples of magnificent manhood. Only a day or two ago—I believe it was night before last—I was reading from the utterances of Michael Davitt before the Irish National Society at Glasgow, Scotland, with reference to the conditions in his mother country. In the face of British subjects and before Englishmen he brought his indictment against England. Ireland to-day, under imperialism, differing from the proud States around her which, although small in area, have gradually grown and doubled their population, increased their wealth, and diminished their burdens of taxation, Ireland since 1801 has lost 50 per cent of her population; insanity and poverty have increased; the sturdy virility of the population has been diminished by emigration of the fittest to other countries in order that they might escape oppress-

Under an Irish parliament two millions of taxes were borne by the Irish people; under the British Parliament to-day, with the population not greater than then, Ireland bears a burden of twelve millions of taxes, an increase of 600 per cent. Of the whole industrial production one-half goes to tax gatherers and landlords. These are the blessings of imperialistic government, if you please. Ireland deserves a better fate—Ireland that has thrilled us with her eloquence and entranced us with her songs; that furnished to the world a Burke, a Philips, an Erskine, a Goldsmith, a Campbell, and a Moore! Yet the decay of a century has, under the blighting power of imperialism, brought her low. With independence she might have been of the proudest and greatest of European States. Who knows?

Canada is more fortunate—is practically independent. Ireland is almost within cannon shot of England, but Canada is within hand shake of the United States, while a large per cent of the population there is ready and desirous of becoming a part of us. What is to be hoped for from colonization of the Philippines? The inhabitants have exhibited courage, fortitude, pride, and love of country. Do gentlemen in good faith expect ever to see pacific conditions there under our dominion? Will the stubborn inhabitants of more than a thousand islands, inaccessible to our arms, smarting under blasted hopes, be easily brought into sub-I fear it will be long before the price in blood and life and treasure is fully paid for our possession. Gentlemen assure them that they shall enjoy as full a measure of liberty as they are capable of. I might refer to those words of Lincoln, the greatest Republican, who pointed out that those people who would pre-scribe limitations to the capability of other people of governing themselves might have just cause to fear the loss of their own

But, Mr. Chairman, why have we incurred all the dangers and embarrassments of the present policy? I have no patience with the insincere cant we so often hear about Providence having imposed upon us an obligation to the islanders themselves and the rest of the world. The gentleman from Illinois was moved with a most admirable affection for all the earth. He declared his love for the Germans, the French, but especially for the British. He commended the sending of a commission to attend the coronation of England's King. He is proud that he is Anglo-Saxon and that he speaks the English tongue, and so are we all, Saxon and that he speaks the English tongue, and so are we all, I suppose. He loves the English people. But why? Because they are our kith and kin? Because we derive from them in a large measure our system of laws? Because of a common literature and a common civilization? Because of the similarity of our institutions? Because out of a mass of British ore was refined the pure gold of American republican institutions? Perhaps these things may all affect his mind; but he betrayed another and a more cogent research to the Beauthlean mind; they are the second contents of his may all affect his hind; but he betrayed another and a more cogent reason to the Republican mind of to-day. The real secret of his devotion lies in a matter of gain, of trade, of opportunity for trade, of the accumulation of profit. This it is that animates the party to which he belongs at all times upon all questions. It is that Great Britian purchases one-half of the things that we have to sell. It is in a commercial spirit that he was in love with Great Britain.

Unfortunately, we have reached a time when money seems to be the central idea of government, as well as in the transactions of private life. I believe, sir, that there is a better and a higher vocation than money getting. I believe that there are higher and holier considerations that should enter into our hearts when we come to dispose of the great questions of state. But, even as a money proposition, I am convinced that our Philippine venture is a mistake. It will furnish opportunity to the already rich to increase their fortunes, but at a heavy cost to the people. Even if it were a success, I assert that morally we have no right to turn our backs on every sacred tradition of the Republic and all the ideas we have related in the rest. the ideas we have valued in the past—principles that, as some of us believe, are more vitally important to us and our welfare than anything that may be computed in dollars and cents.

There are better things than the acquisition of money, Mr. Chairman. A competency with security is more to be desired than affluence with uncertain tenure. Is there anybody who doubts the capability of the American people to take care of themselves after our past history—to successfully compete in trade, to add now larger to our fame, now strength to our constitutional add new luster to our fame, new strength to our constitutional fabric, new prosperity to our people, adhering all the while to the well-recognized theories that have been at the foundation of this great and successful Republic?

We needed not to extend our military power beyond the confines of the continent, and there is yet time to withdraw it.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, if we had continued in the course so long pursued, there would have been no need of fear from any power on earth. The combined powers of the world could not have prevailed against us. I think I am justified in making that statement, though it may be considered by some a vainglorious boast. Behold the heroes of the Transvaal; a little band of Dutch patriots are contending still against the combined military and be their destiny God knows. Whether indomitable manhood, unfaltering courage, reckless devotion, and sublime faith in God are yet to save them from oppression, we may not now know. We can only hope that the flame of liberty shall not be quenched. If two week republics without recourage, with both a formula of the course of If two weak republics, without resources, with but a few squadrons can thus hold at bay the mighty empire of Britain, America would be secure against the world.

Mr. Chairman, I would not be considered unfriendly to England or her people. I am sensible of the ties which bind us to them. They are our cousins, "bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh." We have greater affinity with them than with any other monarchy. I am condemning in England that which deserves I have condemned her for those things only which I am denouncing here at home in our own Government. I love to think of the British in connection with the great charter and Runnymede; I love to hold that charter side by side with the Declaration of Independence, our great charter; and I would to God that neither of these great Governments had ever departed from the principles contained in those two great instruments.

What is to come? Shall we for gain overturn all our historic traditions? I do not underestimate the importance of trade. I know it is necessary for nations to maintain cordial relations of amity with other powers for purposes of mutual trade. What I protest against is the putting of trade—commercialism, greed—

As I remarked a moment ago there is no danger of lack of success in the field of commerce and trade. Have we not grown? Have we not forged to the forefront? Did we not in the beginning of the war with Spain stand in the very front rank of nations in trade and profitable commerce? Yet all this had been acquired without the means which gentlemen seem to think are so essential to our further progress.

If I had time to refer to figures they would bear me out in the statement that the course upon which we have entered is not wise, even from considerations of trade. Our trade has increased everywhere except where we have sought to establish it by force; everywhere except where we have sought to establish it by force; there other countries have outstripped us. Under the open door policy which we have wisely and judiciously adopted, as I maintain, in the Orient, what do we gain in commerce. Do we not to-day stand in fair competition with the world for our trade? And was not that the case before? Have we then assumed the burden of a great standing army in the Philippines, a permanent military post there, which brings us naught but danger, responsi-bility, and expense? So it seems to me that good results to none by our unwarranted action.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that integrity between nations is just as essential as integrity among individuals, and that moral obligations are equally binding. There was a time when we recognized this truth and kept a national conscience void of offenses Our first century I fear must be ever our most glorious. It will for all time furnish to the world an illustrious example of what for all time furnish to the world an illustrious example of what may be attained by a people living true to the principles of a just and real republic. It is replete with noble deeds of national greatness, deeds which have never been surpassed and will never be eclipsed by the luster of achievements yet to come.

Why shall we retrograde? Why fall back from this proud stand and place ourselves among the contending powers of Europe in the field of militarism and colonialism, ever vying with each other for advantage, ever in the constant dread of with each other for advantage, ever in the constant dread of greedy aggression, ever exposed to the danger of attack. If these things are necessary to make of us a world power, I would have

I would that our country might live in harmony with the history of the past. Glorious as that has been, our history is yet incomplete; there must be added to it the record of recent and of future events. The letters will be burned deep in the tablet for future generations to read. There it will be seen that the nation which, for a hundred years, stood for free, independent government of its people, and asserted that principle in behalf of every people, reached at last a time when, yielding to the seductions of greed and rapacity, it broke faith, it violated its national obligations, it forgot national integrity, and plunged itself into a carnival of oppression, military vanity, and rapacious aggression.

Gentlemen ever invoke the flag. Sir, appeal to sentiment, apostrophe to the flag, does not avail. They are not relevant. We are confronted by practical questions, involving our own safety and happiness. After all, the flag is only dear to us because of its associations, because of the deeds that were achieved under it as the emblem of noble purpose in the hearts of the people. It is dear to us because it has stood for national honor and integrity, for liberty and the rights of men here and elsewhere. Apart from that it becomes a mere patchwork of red, white, and blue bunting.

I hope, Mr. Chairman—it seems like hoping against hope—that we may be saved from what I consider will almost inevitably come to us from this great wrong. It will be advertised in the future history of which I spoke that the American Republic, acting avowedly from the spirit of humanity, inaugurated a war in the name of liberty and ended it by striking her to the earth—a war to give freedom to one people and deny it to another; to set Cuba free and transfer the enslavement of the Filipinos from conquered Spain to ourselves. We declared solemnly by the resolution of the Congress that the war which we waged was a war in the interests of humanity and not for the sake of con-quest. We declared that the people of Cuba were and of right should be free and independent. And yet in the treaty of peace we required cession of the Philippines to ourselves, to make of a people who had given us their aid to win the victory, and were as much entitled under heaven to freedom as the Cubans, our colonial subjects against their will. These are the stern facts, and thus will history be recorded.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that Providence, whom we have reason to believe has guided us throughout the past, may yet save us from what I believe will be a calamitous end if the policy inaugurated shall be persisted in. I trust that the people, who have always been supreme in this country, will yet enforce a reversal, and demand of their public servants a return to the simple methods of the Republic. I hope that that counsel may prevail which will justhe Republic. I hope that that counsel may prevall which will justify us ever in love for the flag and pride in our institutions and the continued belief that the Republic is persistent for the preservation of the liberties and happiness of the people, and that we shall have no military post, either permanent or temporary, beyond our continental borders. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a few words from the text which I now propose to quote:

Should a wise man utter vain knowledge and fill his belly with the east wind? Should he reason with unprofitable talk? or with speeches, wherewith he can do no good?

Mr. Chairman, I could not well say all I wish to say in the few minutes at my disposal, and will only ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, on page 17 of the pending bill I find this item:

MILITARY POST.

For the establishment in the vicinity of Manila, P. I., of a military post, including the construction of barracks, quarters for officers, hospital, store-houses, and other buildings, as well as water supply, lighting, sewerage, and drainage, necessary for the accommodation of a garrison of two full regiments of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and two batteries of artillery, to be available until expended, $500,000.

This seems to be the first glimpse of light that we have had on the subject of the "developing policy" and the gradually unfold-ing purpose of the Republican Administration in respect to the domination of the United States in the Philippine Islands

Mr. Chairman, it appears from this paragraph of the bill that we are to have a permanent military establishment located over there, military barracks and offices, costing, to begin with, a half million dollars. How much it will cost before it is finished no man can tell. How much before peace is fully established and our authority fully accepted, no man can measure.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard much of the Government's Mr. Chairman, we have heard much of the Government's policy in the Philippines, which bears a striking resemblance to the policy of George III in the American colonies. It is not a permanent policy based on established principles. It is not founded on those eternal laws of justice which our forefathers discovered and affirmed for themselves and their posterity. It is merely a tentative, hesitating, and uncertain mode of procedure from day to day, from week to week, and year to year, not guided by any great precepts of wisdom or forethought, but only by the insane desire for more power, more patronage, more land, more gold, and more of that ephemeral and illusive phantom, the glory of nations. And therefore it is that gentlemen on the other side of nations. And therefore it is that gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are never willing to discuss the question and face the responsibility as statesmen should do.

Aye, gentlemen, you run away from the issue. You cover it up with honeyed phrases; you exalt it to the skies and hang it upon the rainbow. Then, when we ask you to define it and defend it you take refuge in those very same metaphors of mist and doubt with which kings and tyrants in all ages have justified their conquest of weaker nations and inferior races. You are doing it because of your love for them. Likewise George III loved his colonies, taxed them without their consent, and refused them colonies, taxed them without their consent, and refused them self-government. You are doing it because you have a mission in the world. You say they are unable to govern themselves, and so you have taken a contract to do it for them. Whether they consent or not; whether you have any real right to do so or not; whether the business of governing other people without their consent is a duty imposed by divine commission or a function usurped for profit and partisan advantage, are questions which you dare not open for discussion. These poor people beyond the seas are unable to defend themselves against this great and powerful nation. We have freed them from Spain, and now you seek seas are unable to defend themselves against this great and powerful nation. We have freed them from Spain, and now you seek to rivet upon them the yoke of bondage to us. Shame upon you! We went to war for a noble purpose. You have turned that war into a base and brutal tyranny. Now be honest about it and tell us why. You have told us because you love those benighted people you are going to shoot them down. Don't try to deceive people you are going to shoot them down. Don't try to deceive yourselves any longer. Be honest and tell the truth. It is not because you love them nor because you love your own country. It is because you lust after the fat offices which this business of governing people always provides, especially governing people against their will.

I beg you be honest with yourselves and with the country. You talk glibly about our responsibility for the government of those islands. Who imposed that responsibility upon us? You have assumed it not because of any sense of duty. Thank God, duty is a simple and primal sense of obligation. It does not require elaborate analysis in the laboratory of politics. It is the simple and sublime sense of obligation between man and man. Now, lock into the faces of these people you are abouting down and and sublime sense of obligation between man and man. Now, look into the faces of those people you are shooting down and say whether you honestly feel that it is your individual duty to go on with the shooting-down process in order to thrust your ideas upon them and force them to accept your form of government. Your excuse you know is a baseless fabrication. You don't believe it. It is a monstrous falsehood. Furthermore, you have not even the flimsy, glittering excuse of national glory, for it is no glory to a giant to kick a child into the gutter. And you have not the sordid excuse of national gain, for it has cost us more than $300,000,000 and will never bring us back the three hundredth part of it.

No. If you will be honest and frank with us you will admit No. If you will be nonest and frank with us you will admit that you have but two reasons, and they are partisan and mercenary. You think the jingo sentiment of the country has not yet cooled down and the doctrine of expansion is the keynote of commercialism, while the business of governing distant colonies is profitable to the party in power. The patronage is immense, and you are not willing to give it up. The great Government contracts to furnish ships and armor and guns and supplies for the Army and the Navy, amounting to a hundred millions a year, enable you to reward your friends at the public expense, and the great fat offices furnish resting places for Administration's pets of high and low degree.

But I pass by the fat jobs in the Army and the Navy, and content myself with pointing out a few of these soft places already provided for civil administration.

Mr. Chairman, only a short time ago the Congressional party, returning from the Philippines, brought us this list of salaries of our colonial satraps, who govern the country by authority of one man and fix their own salaries:

Governor Taft, president of the Commission	$20,000
Each of four commissoners	15,000
Secretary to the Commission	7,500
Chief justice, a Filipino	7,500
	www.Trooper

No wonder the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] was able to quote this afternoon the approval of the Filipino chief justice, because, drawing a salary of $7,500 a year from the United States Government, it is not to be supposed that he would want the job to come to an end very soon.

Six justices, two of them Filipinos	$7,000
Treasurer	6,000
Auditor	6,000
Collector of customs.	6,000
Head of department of posts	6,000
Chief of bureau of education	6,000

Right here, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact, which seems to me to be a significant one, and by comparison, at least, a shameful fact for us to have to face, that the commissioner of education for the Philippine Islands draws a salary from this Government of $6,000 a year, while the distinguished educator who presides over the Bureau of Education for this great country of ours, a man who has given his life work to the cause of education and whose distinction in his profession is recognized in every civilized country in the world, draws a salary only half as large.

Up to September 1 last Governor Taft was receiving a salary of $12,000 a year, with $15 per diem for incidental expenses, I suppose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Subsistence.

Mr. VANDIVER. Subsistence, I presume, as my friend from Colorado has suggested, and what perquisites besides that I am unable to discover from the report; but at any rate at that date his salary was fixed at $5,000 as a commissioner and $15,000 additional as the head of a bureau.

Think of it, gentlemen, $5,000 as a commissioner and $15,000 additional as the head of a bureau! "A bureau chief" fixing his own salary! Accordingly, he is now receiving a salary of $20,000 a year.

His other colleagues on the Commission also receive salaries of $5,000 a year each as members of the Commission and $10,000 as heads of bureaus. Their compensation, therefore, amounts to a total of $15,000 annually.

Not a great while ago a number of members of this House, members on both sides of the Chamber, visited the Philippine Islands, and came back, and some of them have given us some valuable information. I desire to refer to one or two things valuable information. which have leaked out.

While Governor Taft is recognized as a man of ability no one will attempt to justify the policy of allowing him and his colleagues to fix their own salaries. He is doubtless able and industrious, but his colleagues on that Commission are occupying soft places—mere sinecures. But even if they were the ablest and best men in the country they should not be allowed to vote money out of the general Treasury, nor out of the revenues of the islands for their even colories. their own salaries.

Mr. Worcester, of the Commission, is said to be drawing his salary ($15,00) chiefly for writing about bugs.

Writing about bugs in the Philippines on a salary of $5,000, as a United States Commissioner, and $10,000 more as a bugologist, making books which will probably still further increase his

Mr. Moses is the nominal head of the educational bureau but the man who does the work is F. M. Atkinson, formerly of Boston, and superintendent of education, at $6,000 a year.

I might enlarge upon this list of salaries and this miserable method of plundering both the Treasury of the United States and the revenues collected from those helpless people, but I have not the time. All of this is incidental to the business of governing colonies. It has been so in all ages and will be so as long as human nature continues to be what it is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in that connection another fact I notice. If you will take any bill which comes before this House and read the level extra in which it opens you will see that it is.

the legal style in which it opens, you will see that it is:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

But if you take the enactment of the tariff law by which customs duties are now collected in the Philippines you will find that the legal style with which it opens is itself a declaration of imperial government. It reads not by the "authority of law" or of "the Congress of the United States" or any other legislative body, but "By the authority of the President of the United States."

That is imperialism pure and simple.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I am on that subject, I wish to call attention briefly to the remarks of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber in trying to wave off this subject and evade a discussion of the fundamental proposition underlying this legislacussion of the fundamental proposition underlying this legislation; for they tell us that they want to give the Filipinos just as large a measure of liberty and self-government as they are qualified to enjoy. That remark was made by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] this afternoon, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines]. It is the same old story that has been reiterated from the lips of every Republican orator and from the press of every Republican organ throughout the country—that these people are incapable of self-government; that we are going to give them the best government that they are that we are going to give them the best government that they are capable of enjoying.

Capable of enjoying.

Only recently I noticed in that great Republican organ, The Outlook, a religious journal, edited by the distinguished clergyman, Rev. Lyman Abbott, of New York, an article referring to this subject in glowing terms, proposing to give these people the best Government they were capable of, on the general principle that "all governments exist for the benefit of the governed"—

"for the benefit of the governed," mind you!

How artful he is!

How artful he is!

The American Continental Congress declared it was from the "Consent of the governed." The doctrine of kings has always been that it was for the "benefit of the governed."

But who is to determine what will be for the best interests of the governed. You gentlemen assume to determine that question for yourselves and not for the Filipinos. In opposition to that sentiment so often expressed by tyrants who have gone out to make conquests of other people; in opposition, I say, to this sentiment of kings and thrones in every country of the world which they have undertaken to conquer, I place the words of Henry Clay. On this very point Henry Clay once said:

It is the doctrine of thrones that man is too ignorant to govern himself. Their partisans assert his incapacity in reference to all nations; if they can not command universal assent to the proposition, it is then demanded to particular nations; and our pride and our presumption, too, often make converts of us. I contend that it is to arraign the disposition of Providence himself to suppose that He has created beings incapable of governing themselves and to be trampled on by kings. Self-government is the natural government of man ment of man.

But these people are not ignorant. You falsify the record when you say so. There is a smaller per cent of illiteracy in the island of Luzon than in some of the States of this Union.

George III charged the American colonists with being ignorant frontiersmen when Patrick Henry thundered defiance at his throne, and so it has ever been

The whole history of the world teaches us that colonial government has always been in the end and finally not for the benefit of the governed, but for the benefit of the governors. gone into the business of governing because you want to confer a special benefit upon the people you are subjugating to your authority, but because there is profit in the business. The business special beneat upon the people you are subjugating to your authority, but because there is profit in the business. The business of governing the world has largely for the last century, devolved upon Great Britain; and I call your attention to the fact that to-day Great Britain's government in India is a government of tyranny and robbery from beginning to end.

English landlords, speculators, and bondholders and Government appointees to-day draw $150,000,000 a year from India. Talk to me about English rule fostering intelligence as a vindication of the colonial system in India! I point you to the fact that there are 70,000,000 people in India who can neither read nor write; the taxes of India are swallowed up in Government official salaries and the payment of interest to English bondholders, while only 3 pence per child is distributed for education. I point you to the further fact that while India has year after year continued to suffer more from famine and oppression English landlords have continued to grow rich and powerful.

The whole history of English landlordism in India and Ireland may be summed up in the definition which John Mitchell gave of the British Empire in 1860.

I quote from the speech of Michael Davitt, delivered in Glasgow on the 22d of last December and reported in that great paper, the Irish World, as follows:

paper, the Irish World, as follows:

John Mitchell, in 1860, defined the British Empire as "a vast organized imposture, a machine for exploiting nations, an unmixed and unredeemed mischief, whose fruits are famine in India, opium in China, pauperism in Ireland, disturbance and disorder in Europe, and robbery everywhere." [Loud cheers.] We see how true to the letter this description is shown to be in South Africa to-day, and those who know India and the condition of her people know that the rule of imperialism there means perpetual famine over some districts and poverty, more or less, in all the rest. During the ten years from 1881 to 1900 it is estimated that over 10,000,000 people died of famine in India; that is, more human beings than have lost their lives in all the wars of the world during the past one hundred years. [Loud cries of "Shame!"] The average earnings of the population of this enormous British dependency amount to the sum of about 3 half pence per head per day.

BRITISH IMPERIALISM HAS REDUCED INDIA TO POVERTY AND IGNORANCE.

William Digby, in his book just published, Prosperous British India, declares that an analysis of the incomes of these people shows that 90,000 of them earn less in a whole year, in aggregate wages or wealth, than Lord George Hamilton has received in salaries during the time he has been secretary for India.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is the further fact that under British rule Ireland to-day presents the only example of a civilized nation in the world declining in population. Within the last one hundred years, while all other countries of Europe, small and great, have continued to build up their enterprises and increase their population, Ireland to-day is declining in population, declining in wealth and power. British rule in Ireland is a sample of colonial government wherever it has occurred. The American people rebelled against the colonial government of England, and to day we are trying to foist mon the helpless people of the to-day we are trying to foist upon the helpless people of the Philippine Islands a similar form of government. Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House with further remarks, but I want to say in conclusion that the colonial system of the world ought to be a just lesson; and if you gentlemen on the other side were willing to meet the responsibility and discuss the very fundamental principles upon which this legislation is based, you would find yourselves obliged to admit that it is based upon the same doctrine in essence as England's unholy war in South

We are engaged in the same business, and hence we can not open our mouths. England is destroying the republics of South Africa and shooting down and starving to death the men, women, and children of Boers because the business of governing them is too profitable for her to relinquish. We drove Spain out of Cuba because of the cruelty of Weyler and his concentration camps. But we can say nothing to England about the 14,200 women and children she has starved to death in the concentration camps of South Africa since the 1st day of last June.

No; our mouths are closed as a nation because we are engaged in the same kind of business; and this is the reason why this Congress is not allowed to offer the assistance nor even the sympathy of our Government to the struggling patriots in that unhappy land. No, gentlemen, you must blot out the whole history of colonization before you can defend the course you have entered upon. [Applause on Democratic side.]

HEADQUARTERS PROVOST-MARSHAL-GENERAL, OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH, Manila, P. I., July 31, 1900.

Headquarters Provost-Marshal-General,
Office of the Board of Health,
Manila, P. I., July 31, 1900.

The Acting Adjutant-General, Provost-Marshal-General, Manila, P. I.

Sir: In obedience to your letter of July 28, I have the honor to make the following report on the work of the board of health of the city of Manila, Wy duties with the board of health were pursuant to the following orders: Special Orders, No. 181, paragraph 10, Headquarters Department of the Pacific and Eighth Army Corps, Manila, P. I., July 5, 1899, and Special Orders, No. 142, paragraph 5, Headquarters Provost-Marshal-General, Manila, P. I., July 31, 1899. Before receiving the first order I was taken down with typhol fever, and had a relapse a few days after complying with the second, so that my duties with the board of health really began on August 28, 1899.

The medical personnel of the board for the past year has been as follows: Lieut. William J. Calvert, assistant surgeon, U. S. A., in addition to his other duties as regimental surgeon, Sixth United States Artillery, and attending surgeon to the prisoners of war, was assigned to duty on the board of health July 31, 1899. He was relieved from his other duties January 7, 1900, and besides directing the bacteriological department of the municipal laboratory has had charge of the plague hospital.

Capt. Charles Lynch, assistant surgeon, U. S. A., reported for duty with the board December 24, 1899; Maj. Ira C. Brown, surgeon, U. S. V., January 99, 1900; Acting Asst. Surg. Julius C. Le Hardy, U. S. A., January 26, and Acting Asst. Surg. Harry L. Gilchrist, June 18, 1900, the latter relieving Major. Brown, who had been ordered for temporary duty with the transport Hancock. During the temporary absence of Assistant Surgeon Calvert in Japan in March and April, Acting Asst. Surg. Joseph J. Curry, U. S. A., conducting head and the bacteriological department, made all autopsies, and rendered valuable service in other ways.

Dr. C. H. Pardo-Tavera and Dr. Ariston Bautista Lim, both of Manila, have bee

the individual members were from time to time called upon to do.

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

The department of registration of births, marriages, and deaths in former times was in charge of parochial priests. The board has endeavored to keep these records, but it only pretends to accuracy in the record of deaths. It also required the registration of physicians, pharmacists, and dentists practicing in their professions. It was with some difficulty that the superintendents of the parochial cemeteries could be prevented from interring bodies without a burial permit and make the weekly return of burials required. After a clear understanding of the necessity of these requirements the regulations were complied with.

A municipal dispensary, where the indigent sick can obtain medicines free of cost, has been in operation since December, 1899; nevertheless, the majority of births and deaths occur without medicines or medical attendance.

VACCINATION AND SMALLPOX.

The board continued the work of vaccination and revaccination begun by

The board continued the work of vaccination and revaccination begun by Major Bourne. The result of this work is shown in the table of mortality statistics. For the nine months from October, 1899, to July, 1900, there were 7 deaths in this city from smallpox; whereas in the month of March alone, in 1899, there were 75 deaths from this disease. The adjoined table shows the number of vaccinations by months. This work was done under difficulties, as the authorities thought it advisable not to permit forcible vaccination. Many cases of smallpox came into the city from the country districts, and the board sent its vaccinators to all outlying towns and villages for the purpose of vaccinating every inhabitant.

Records of these vaccinations were not returned except from the town of Malabon. After the dispersion of the Filipino army, as the country became opened up, the military surgeons in every district, under the direction of the chief surgeon's office, began the vaccination of the inhabitants, and the output of the vaccine farm had to be largely increased, as is shown in the attached table. This increase was made with little additional expense, and every demand for vaccine virus was promptly met. When the present wet season is over, and this subject of vaccination in the provinces is vigorously taken hold of and carried on until every person in these islands has been vaccinated and revaccinated, the vaccine station will be prepared to furnish the necessary amount of virus.

LEPROSY.

Leprosy was introduced here in 1633. The Emperor of Japan sent a ship with 150 lepers as a present to be cared for by the Catholic priests. These lepers were allowed to land, and as no practical methods were ever adopted to eradicate the disease or prevent its spread, it steadily increased, until now, according to the estimates of the Franciscan Fathers, there are not less than 30,000 lepers in the archipelago, the larger number being in the Visayas. Under the Spanish régime the order of the Franciscans had charge of the charity work among the lepers.

Several hospitals and asylums were built, the largest of which, San Lazaro Hospital, is located in Manila and has a capacity for 400 patients. When a house-to-house inspection was inaugurated last January more than 100 lepers were found concealed in houses, and were sent to San Lazaro Hospital. Many others escaped into the surrounding country. The necessity of the segregation and isolation of the lepers on one of the islands was early recognized and agitated by the board of health. As soon as the conditions permitted, the authorities appointed a commission to select a suitable island or islands for this purpose, and to present plans and estimates of buildings and to formulate the necessary regulations. This commission is now engaged in this work, skithorities appointed a commission to calce a suitable taken for takends for this purpose, and to present plans and estimates of buildings and to formulate the necessary regulations. This commission is now engaged in this work,

BUBONIC PLAGUE.

BUBONIC PLAGUE.

The first case of plague in this city of which we have any knowledge occurred in No. 14, Calle Legaspi, Intramuros. On December 29, 1889, there was a death in this house, the diagnosis on the death certificate being typhoid same bouse, with a similar diagnosis. These two cases died without medical attendance, and the diagnosis was made by the municipal physician after death. On January 2 a boy was removed from this house to the San Juan de Dice Hospital, having been taken sick the day previous, and the notification required in cases of infectious diseases reached this office on the 2d, the diagnosis being typhoid fever.

May be the sense of the control of the sense of the one bunk house, made of nipa and bamboo. Few of them paid any attention to personal hygiene, and their surroundings were miserable. Every condition, except famine, favorable to an outbreak of disease among these people to personal hygiene, favorable to an outbreak of disease among these people was present.

That no outbreak did occur is due to the prompt and efficient methods adopted, which were carried out under the personal supervision and direction of Assistant Surgeon Lynch, who, here as elsewhere, proved himself to be a willing and capable officer. No infection occurred in our forces handling cases of plague, either in or out of the hospital. The opinion I have formed of plague from the experience of the past six months is that little difficulty will be experienced in controlling it in any intelligent community with modern sanitary conditions. The board made early application to the government laboratories in Bombay for Haffkin's vaccine material. Some was also obtained from the marine-hospital surgeon, who has also recently received some Yersin serum. It is almost impossible without force to use the Haffkin vaccination on Chinese or natives. A thorough test has not been given either the Haffkin or the Yersin serum, but we have not been favorably impressed with either. Dr. Calvert at a later date will make a full report on this subject, also on his own work in this line.

I can not speak in too high terms of the absolute fearlessness, energy, and cheerful cooperation of every medical officer associated with me in this work and of the faithful and efficient services of Acting Hospital Steward Thomas McL. Van Wyck and Private James F. Behan, Hospital Corps, Unite ⁴ States Army, who have been on duty with the board of health.

Very respectfully,

GUY L. EDIE,

Major and Surgeon, U. S. V., President Board of Health.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Sherman, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9315, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. Cannon to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Robert M. Gardner, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

FREE HOMESTEADS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 159) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona-fide settlers in the north one-half of the Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, and reserving the public lands for that purpose, be made a continuing order after the conclusion of the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, and continue until disposed of, reserving the consideration of appropriation bills and privileged matters. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 159) be made a special and continuing order after the disposition of the urgent deficiency bill until disposed of, not to interfere with bills from the Committee on Appropriations, Ways and Means, or conference reports. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think we had better not do that at present. I shall object to it at present.
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do, at present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3239. An act providing for the free transportation of all mail matter sent by Mrs. Ida S. McKinley.

HAMILTON H. BLUNT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa submits the following privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House a copy of all records and papers bearing upon the court-martial and military services of Hamilton H. Blunt, late captain, Forty-ninth United States Volunteer Infantry.

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution No. 89, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do lay on the table. Your committee, after carefully considering the aforesaid resolution, can not see any reason why the Secretary of War should be directed to transfer to the House a copy of all records and papers bearing upon a military court-martial. If a bill should come before this committee touching upon this court-martial, the Secretary of War would be called upon for such information as he could furnish.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman who introduced the resolution?

Mr. HULL. It was introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Allen], I think. It is a resolution the like of which has never been passed by the House. If the Committee on Military Affairs should have a bill before the committee demanding an investigation of the record of this man, it could call for any secure. vestigation of the record of this man, it could call for and secure

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.
On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all general debate on the urgent deficiency bill be closed at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before that consent is given, I will ask the gentleman how he will divide the remainder of the time?

Mr. CANNON. That side of the Horse health has a second

Mr. CANNON. That side of the House has had three-quarters of the time and there is a gentleman on this side of the House That side of the House has had three-quarters who desires an hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That will mean simply giving the gentleman one hour to close, and then we would not have any time to reply. I do not know what the gentleman desires to talk about.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think there is a desire for further de-bate, from what the chairman of the committee indicated to me.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not want ordinarily to make an objection except there be some reason for it, but I would not like to yield and allow some gentleman to have the close, and take the floor for an hour and give us no possible time for reply. I do not know what he is going to talk about. He may be going to make some partisan or political speech, and therefore I shall have to object

It is my colleague from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. Mr. STEELE. Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no objection to making it 2 o'clock and give us an hour.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to further debate. If anyone desires additional time, I would be inclined to meet the demand.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not object to you taking an hour, but we ought to have an hour on this side, if desired, and I suggested that the gentleman make it 2 o'clock to close debate instead of 1.

Mr. CANNON. I expect it had better go over until to-morrow and then we will see if it is desired. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the legislative assembly of Porto Rico, praying for the enactment of legislation to settle the questions of the title to, and permit the enjoyment by those who shall have the title of, certain buildings, lots, and public lands; which was referred to the Committee on

Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed in the

RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

Whereas by the provisions of Article VIII of the treaty of Paris, signed December 10, 188, Spain ceded to the United States, in Porto Rico, all the buildings, wharves, barracks, forts, structures, public highways, and other immovable property which, in conformity with the law, belonged to the public domain, and as such belonged to the Crown of Spain, but particularly providing in said Article VIII that the relinquishment or cession therein referred to could not in any respect impair the property or rights which by law belong to the peaceful possession of property of all kinds, of provinces, municipalities, public or private establishments, ecclesiastical or civic bodies, or any other association having legal capacity to acquire and possess property in the territory ceded; and

Whereas upon the formal surrender of the sovereignty of Porto Rico, October 18, 1898, all buildings, wharves, barracks, forts, structures, public highways, and other immovable property, including lands and lots, then in possession of or controlled or administered by officers of the Spanish army or navy or by civil representatives of Spain, were turned over by the Spanish Commission to the United States Commission, appointed to receive the same, and subsequently by said United States Commission to the military government held and administered as the property of the United States and continued in possession of the fullitary authorities stationed in Porto Rico by order of the President, and by the said military government beld and administered as the property of the United States, and continued in possession of helmilitary authorities stationed in Porto Rico by order of the honorable Secretary of War.

Whereas the records of titles to property, files of royal decrees and orders, and accounts of expenditures of public funds prove either a legal title in or a strong equitable right to the possession of numerous buildings, parcels,

CHARLES HARTZELL, President Executive Council, MAN. F. ROSSY, Speaker House of Delegates.

Approved January 14, 1902.

WILLIAM H. HUNT, Governor. SECRETARY'S OFFICE, PORTO RICO.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of a memorial to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, passed by the legislative assembly of Porto Rico and approved by the governor on January 14, 1902, the original of which is on file in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand at San Juan, Porto Rico, and caused to be affixed the great seal of Porto Rico this 14th day of January, A. D. 1902.

[SEAL.]

ARTHUR E. PARKE,

ARTHUR E. PARKE, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. LODGE. I present a petition from the Boston Chamber of Commerce, praying for the negotiation of a reciprocal trade agreement with the Dominion of Canada. He also presented a petition of Wood Workers' Union No. 70, American Federation of Labor, of Fond du Lac, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction of war vessels in the navy-yards of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present petitions signed by members of the Missouri State Militia, who volunteered and were regularly the Missouri State Militia, who volunteered and were regularly mustered to serve for a term of six months under a call by Gov. A. R. Gamble, dated August 24, 1861, praying for the passage of a law granting them a pensionable status.

The reasons the petitioners give, which cover only four or five lines, I ask to have inserted in the Record, and that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri presents petitions and asks that the reasons contained therein be printed in the Record. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. none, and it is so ordered.

The reasons referred to are as follows: The reasons referred to are as follows:

First. From the date of the muster in of this militia, in the month of September, 1861, until its muster out, in January, 1862, the several companies, battalions, and regiment were under the immediate command and subject to the orders of the volunteer officers in the service of the United States who commanded the different military posts in the State of Missouri and did active service in scouting, guarding railroad bridges, military posts, military prisons, and protecting Government property. The officers of this Missouri militia made their regular daily reports to the several post commanders and were in all respects used and treated as soldiers of the United States volunteer service; all property captured and all prisoners taken were delivered to the United States volunteer officers in command of the nearest military posts.

Second. That the men who served in this Missouri State militia volunteered and served at a time when their services were of great value to the United States Government, and they are justly entitled to the relief prayed for, and your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Dirigo Grange, No. 13, Patrons of Husbandry, of Brunswick, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called Grout bill, to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

L. A. Davis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL. On the 7th of this month, through some inadvertence, I introduced a bill (S. 2412) to protect the United States mails. I did not intend to introduce the bill. I presume it got mired in with some other bill. it got mixed in with some other bills. I am now instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report it back and recommend its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed indefinitely

Mr. McMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2451) to establish lighthouse and fog-signal stations in Alaskan waters, to report it adversely, and I ask that the bill be postponed indefinitely, a similar bill having passed the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1538) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Laredo, in the State of Texas, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $412,572.70 to repay to the Government of Mexico money erroneously claimed by and paid to the United States on account of awards, adjudged to have been fraudulently made, in the La Abra and Weil claims, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

GAZETTEER OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 4,000 copies of the Gazetteer of the Philippine Islands; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the War Department.

PROTECTION OF SALMON FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. BARD on the 20th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimons consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of Howard M. Kutchin, special agent of the Treasury Department, on the "Protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska" be printed, and that 750 additional copies be printed and bound in paper covers for the use of the Treasury Department.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I submit a resolution which I ask may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved. That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Committee on Printing, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by said committee and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call attention to this resolution, if I may do so.

A large number of the resolutions of this kind provide that the appointment shall be made by the committee or the chairman of the committee, just as the appointment of clerks is made. One resolution reported yesterday gave one of the committees the power of appointing its own messenger. It seems to me that we ought to have some uniform policy in this matter, and I think the uniform policy should be that the committees should appoint their messengers, always being careful that there is in the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms, as I understand there is with the Capitol police and the messengers who perform the general duties at the doors, a force which in case of any exigency would be at his command to keep order. There might be at some time some public disturbance which would require a strong and disciplined force under command of the Sergeant-at-Arms for the protection of the Capitol and the protection of the Senate.

About half of these resolutions are drawn in one way and a half in the other. I spoke in private to my friend from New Hamp-shire [Mr. Gallinger] about the matter yesterday, and I should like to call his attention now to this point. It seems to me there is no reason why the Committee on Printing should not have the appointing of its own messenger, and not leave it to the Sergeantat-Arms, just as it has the appointment of its own clerk. I make this suggestion to my friend the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. PLATT of New York. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts is very satisfactory to me, and I ask that the resolution be so modified.

The resolution as modified was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as fol-

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be authorized to appoint a messenger, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided for by law.

DEATH SENTENCE OF COMMANDANT SCHEEPERS.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a concurrent resolution, and I wish to say a word or two about it. I send the resolution up and ask to have it read, and then I wish to state why I introduce it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

Mr. TELLER. I do not ask for its consideration to-day, but I shall to-morrow.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is announced that sentence of death has been passed upon Commandant Scheepers, of the Orange Free State army, now a prisoner of war in the hands of the British forces in South Africa; and

Whereas it is known that said Commandant Scheepers was captured while lying sick and wounded in hospital, such capture being in violation of articles 1 and 5 of the Geneva Convention; and

Whereas his execution by the British authorities will lead to acts of retaliation and reprisal: Be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President request the Government of Great Britain to set aside, in the interest of humanity, such sentence of death, and accord to Commandant Scheepers the privileges and immunities guaranteed under the Geneva Convention.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President the press dispatches from Great

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the press dispatches from Graaf-

Reinet, Cape Colony, January 19, contain the following:

Lord Kitchener has confirmed the death sentence passed upon the Boer commandant, Scheepers, who was captured last October. He will be shot next Saturday.

From Brussels, January 20, we have the following:

Dr. Leyds, the European representative of the Transvaal, has addressed a protest to the powers against the execution of the Boer commandant, Scheepers, whose death sentence, confirmed by Lord Kitchener, he describes as an assassination justifying retaliation on the parts of Generals Botha and De Wet.

I am told that by to-morrow we can have some evidence showing that the statement in the resolution is correct. If correct, it is certainly a case that calls for the intervention of the United States or some other Government that has some humanity and purposes that, no matter where it is, war shall be conducted upon principles of humanity, or, at least, if not, that we will enter our protest against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

PHILIPPINE CUSTOMS TARIFF.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which was laid on the table to be taken up this morning, by unanimous consent.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted on the 20th instant

by Mr. Culberson, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all suggestions, statements, criticisms, and correspondence between the War Department or any official thereof and any person or corporation, and between the War Department or any official thereof and the Philippine Commission, relating to the customs tariff affecting the Philippine Islands which culminated in the tariff adopted by the Philippine Commission September 17, 1901.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in Senate Document No. 134, just printed, some of the information sought by this resolution is furnished. Accordingly I suggest an amendment to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves to amend the pending resolution. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. Strike out the words "and between the War Department or any official thereof and the Philippine Commission;" so that if amended the resolution would read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all suggestions, statements, criticisms, and correspondence between the War Department or any official thereof and any person or corporation relating to the customs tariff affecting the Philippine Islands which culminated in the tariff adopted by the Philippine Commission September 17, 1901.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 15) to encourage the holding of the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition in the city of Charleston, county of Charleston, State of South Carolina, during the years 1901 and

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKenney, the enrolling clerk of the House, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5814) to provide for the execution in the Philippine Islands and in Porto Rico of deeds for land situate in the District of Columbia, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JENKINS, Mr. BLACKBURN, and Mr. COWHERD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.
Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if the bill has been reprinted as amended by the Senate? I thought the Senate ordered a reprint.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not ordered, the Chair is informed.

Mr. NELSON. There has been one reprint of the bill. The amendments that were made the last time it was under consideration were very slight. I can explain them to the Senator.

Mr. QUARLES. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill which has grown out of the discussion we had the other day. Lask the Secretary to read it.

I ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One moment, before that is This bill having been taken from the Calendar under Rule VIII by unanimous consent, it is subject to the rule limiting debate. Day before yesterday morning the debate went on without limit by general consent. The question is whether the Senate desires the Chair to enforce the five-minutes rule. If not, consent should be asked that that rule be waived.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the rule be waived and that there be no limit to debate.

Mr. HOAR. If we can debate the bill under the five-minutes rule, it would hasten the Senator's purpose very much to do so.

Mr. NELSON. I do not feel like cutting off gentlemen who desire to debate the bill, and therefore I ask that it be considered without reference to the rule.

without reference to the rule.

Mr. HOAR. But if no one should desire to speak more than five minutes it would not be necessary to waive the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the limitation of five minutes be waived in the discussion of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senator from Missouri Mr. Company has offered an Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] has offered an amendment, which is the pending amendment, and which will be read. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Quarles] to it.

The Secretary. After the word "commerce," in line 4, page 4, section 4, strike out the words "and the chief of said bureau of foreign commerce shall be the assistant chief of the said bureau of statistics," and insert:

And the two shall constitute one bureau, to be called the bureau of statists, with a chief of the bureau and one assistant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] offers an amendment as a substitute for this amendment?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, page 4, of the printed bill, strike out all after the words "Statistics and" down to and including the words "United States," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the secretary of commerce shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same, as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other bureaus or departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them, and it is hereby made the duty of such bureaus or departments to furnish such information when so requested, and said secretary of commerce may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Wisconsin pardon the Chair for calling his attention to the fact that the Senator from Missouri who offered the amendment to which this is a substitute is attending a meeting of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution and will shortly be here? The Chair suggests that the Senator from Wisconsin withhold his amendment until the Senator from Missouri arrives.

Mr. QUARLES. I comply with great pleasure with the suggestion of the Chair. However, I should like to have as prompt gestion of the Chair. However, I should like to have as prompt consideration of the amendment as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to be offered to the bill?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is quite impossible for us in this vicinity to know what is going on. If the purpose is to consolidate these two bureaus, it may be done by the amendment, which I suppose has been adopted; but there is not anyone around in this residue of the Senter I think who can form any original. in this section of the Senate, I think, who can form any opinion as to what that amendment is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment has just been offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Quarles]. The Chair took the liberty of suggesting to him, as it was a substitute for one offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell], that the Senator from Missouri is absent as a Regent of the Smithsonian, and will shortly be here, and the Chair suggested that he allow both amendments to lie over until the Senator from Missouri comes in. So nothing has been done with either amend-

Mr. TELLER. I am very glad to know that that is the case, although I think it is a little hard on the Presiding Officer that he shall have to inform us on this side of the Chamber what is going on upon the other side.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think there is a misapprehension. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] comes in at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and does not conflict with it. The Senator from Missouri proposes to strike out, commencing in line 4, the following words:

And the chief of said bureau of foreign commerce shall be the assistant chief of the said bureau of statistics.

And then to insert in place of that the language which I ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And the two shall constitute one bureau, to be called the bureau of statistics, with a chief of the bureau and one assistant.

Mr. NELSON. That is all. Now, the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin comes in subsequent to that, commencing with the word "and" in line 6, and is supplemental to

it. I think there is no conflict between the two, and that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri could well be adopted, leaving the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to be acted

The object of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is to make it perfectly clear that the two bureaus-the one on Forto make it perfectly clear that the two bureaus—the one on For-eign Commerce, brought from the State Department, and the Bureau of Statistics, from the Treasury Department—shall be consolidated into one. A question was raised the other day by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] as to that point, doubting whether there was a consoli-dation. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri is to clear up that question, and does not relate to the subsequent amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

I am quite content that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri should be adopted, because it is in line with what was intended in the bill originally—to consolidate the two bureaus.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri?

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Quarles] offers an amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary. Insert after the amendment just adopted the

That the secretary of commerce shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same, as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other bureaus or departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them, and it is hereby made the duty of such bureaus or departments to furnish such information when so requested, and said secretary of commerce may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PETTUS. It seems that those two amendments are somewhat inconsistent. One makes the consolidation itself, and the other authorizes the secretary of commerce to make it as he may

Mr. QUARLES. It seems to me that my amendment does impinge upon the other, at least slightly. The contemplation of the Senator from Missouri evidently was, in the latter clause of his amendment, to create a bureau to be known as the "Bureau of Statistics." To that extent it would interfere with the more elastic scheme covered by my amendment, which leaves it discretionary with the new secretary to use these bureaus or to combine or consolidate them as he may deem wise. I think in that respect the Senator from Alabama is right, perhaps.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the section may be read as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read that part of the section as already amended, and will then read it as it would stand if amended as proposed by the Senator from Wis-

The SECRETARY. Begin section 4 reads as follows: Beginning in line 23 on page 3, as amended,

That the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, now in the Department of State, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the department of commerce and consolidated with and made a part of the Bureau of Statistics, hereinbefore transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce, and the two shall constitute one bureau, to be called the bureau of statistics, with a chief of the bureau and one assistant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

That the secretary of commerce shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other bureaus or departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them, and it is hereby made the duty of such bureaus or departments for turnish such information when so requested, and said secretary of commerce may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of that Senator whether it is in accordance with our legislative policy and habits to order one Department as of right to demand a compilation of statistical information from another? It might require a great deal of expense. Very often the Senate makes a demand and is met by the answer of the Department that they have no appropriation which enables them to furnish the statistical information required. As I understood it, upon listening to the reading, the amendment gives the secretary of commerce absolute right to require any other department of the Government to furnish any statistical information which he shall need, and that he shall compile it.

Mr. QUARLES. That is true.
Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be again read.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator if it would not be true, as expressed in the amendment, that an officer in the Department of Justice, or in the Treasury, or the Interior Department, busily engaged in performing a duty assigned to him by his own official superior, might be called upon directly—not through the Secresuperior, hight be canced upon directly—not through the secretary of his own Department—and commanded to do some work for another Department, and obliged to lay aside all of his pending business until he complies with that request?

Mr. QUARLES. I should hardly think, Mr. President, that that would be a fair construction of the amendment. I certainly had no such thought in its preparation.

I may simply say to the Senate that my interest in this matter arises out of a certain responsibility which I feel regarding the Census Bureau. My attention has been called to this on account of the action of the Senate in excluding the Census Bureau from the action of the Senate in excluding the Census Bureau from this new department. A debate arose here the other day as to what it was wise to do, and it occurred to me that, instead of having these statistics prepared in different departments, each under the head of a bureau chief, where they were overlapping each other, where the thing was being multiplied and duplicated, it would be far better to bring the Census Bureau into this each other, where the thing was being multiplied and duplicated, it would be far better to bring the Census Bureau into this new department, bring these other bureaus in, and then leave it the duty of the new chief of this department to gather all those statistics and have them issued with all the authenticity that the Government could give them, so that every statistical fact that we sent out would be backed by the authority of the nation, instead of being sent out simply with such authenticity as the head of a department not primarily charged with the gathering of statistics might give it. tistics might give it.

That impression seemed to me so meritorious that I ventured to prepare this amendment, although at the present time, under the action the other day in Committee of the Whole, the Census Bureau is not included in the proposed new department. But whether it be included or not, it has seemed to me very desirable that we should give the new secretary this authority, because every Senator recognizes the difficulty of reaching out into a deevery Senator recognizes the difficulty of reaching out into a department by a kind of surgical operation and taking a bureau away from a department. But here we are organizing a new department, when the thing can be done without jealousy, without friction. It has seemed to me exceedingly desirable that there should be one central head, one central jurisdiction presiding over this matter of statistics, so that trained men might be employed and greater authenticity given to the statistics.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.
Mr. HOAR. I entirely sympathize with the purpose of the Senator, but instead of authorizing the head of the new department to require specific work from the bureaus of other department. ments, thereby establishing relations between the head of one department and the subordinates of another department, he should deal with the head of the department directly, and should obtain, so far as practicable, from the heads of the other departments of the Government the desired information. He would naturally make his application to the head of the other department, and the statute would, of course, make it incumbent upon the other department to respond. The insertion of some phrase of that sort would remove my difficulty.

Mr. SPOONER. Will my colleague permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. QUARLES. With pleasure.
Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] has made a fair construction of the amendment. It only authorizes the secretary of commerce to call upon other departments for statistical data. The amendment reads:

And said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other bureaus or departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them, and it is hereby made the duty of such bureaus or departments to furnish such information when so requested.

I do not conceive that request as authorizing the secretary of commerce to require an investigation, but simply to furnish information which has been obtained.

Mr. HOAR. I did not so understand it, but I understood they were required to furnish data in their possession, to compile and copy the same.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, they compile it anyway; they obtain it for that purpose; and the idea of that is to furnish the information. It is entirely proper. The Senator agrees with me that all statistical information should in some method find its way to the department of commerce.

I think one suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts should have serious attention, and that can be easily reached if my colleague will strike out from his amendment the words "bureaus or." The amendment now reads:

And said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other bureaus or departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them, and it is hereby made the duty of such bureaus or departments to furnish such information, etc.

I suggest that my colleague strike out the words "bureaus or," so as to leave it simply "departments," so that they will communicate each Secretary with the other Secretary. I think that would eliminate the objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts, which is well founded in that respect.

Mr. QUARLES. I shall be very glad to consent to that change.
Mr. SPOONER. I think one Cabinet officer ought not to be dealing directly with bureaus under another Cabinet officer.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, while I have the floor, I wish simply to call the attention of the Senate, and especially of my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], who participated simply to call the attention of the Senate, and especially of my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], who participated in the debate the other day, to this feature of the amendment: That, instead of providing that these bureaus should be abolished or undertaking to determine in advance what should be done with them, we leave it optional and discretionary with the new secretary to leave these bureaus affiliated as they are if he shall conclude that the public interest will be promoted by that course, giving him, however, the discretion to rearrange and consolidate if he shall think that course to be more wise and bene-

As to the Census, at the proper time I shall call the attention of the Senate in some proper way to the propriety of placing back the Census Bureau in this new department. Whether it be made permanent by subsequent legislation or left as it is, I think it ought to be in this department, because its function is essentially the gathering of statistics. I hope for that reason it may be left under this new department, to be dealt with in the discretion of the new secretary.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, before he takes his seat I simply wish to make an inquiry of him. Of course those of us who have not been specially charged with the preparation of the bill have depended largely upon the conclusions which have been reached by those who have given it their particular attention. The inquiry which I desire to submit to the honorable senator from Wisconsin is whether the placing of the Department of Labor under this proposed new department has been done with a view of equalizing the labors of the various departments, or whether it has been done because of any particular relation that it is thought the Department of Labor bears to the department of commerce? I simply wish to know by what reasons the committee were influenced in assigning to the department of commerce what is now known as the Department of Labor; whether it was because of the peculiar relationship of the Department of merce what is now known as the Department of Labor; whether it was because of the peculiar relationship of the Department of Labor to the proposed department of commerce and the conse-quent fitness that there should be some connection, or whether, in the effort to equalize the labor of the different departments, it was found necessary to take the Department of Labor and put it in the department of commerce, thus relieving some overcrowded department? Which of these two were the motives and reasons by which the committee were guided?

Mr. QUARLES. In regard to that matter, Mr. President, I think it wiser to refer to the distinguished Senator from Minnethink it wiser to refer to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] who has this bill in charge and who, I am sure, is better equipped to answer the question than I am.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. With the permission of the Senator, perhaps the matter that has been pending can be first disposed of.

Mr. NELSON. Very well. I would suggest to the Senator from Georgia that I will defer for a moment to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Massachusetts.

Mr. BACON. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. HOAR. I merely desire that the pending amendment to the Mr. HOAR. I merely desire that the pending amendment to the amendment shall be disposed of, as we seem to be agreed all around that it is proper. I think the suggestion of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] answers my difficulty so far as it is important. I will ask the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] if he will modify his amendment by striking out the words "bureaus or," where they twice occur, so as to read "other departments." If the Senator will modify his amendment in that way, it will meet my objection.

Mr. QUARLES. I will do so with pleasure. I ask to amend the first draft of the amendment—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that right.

Mr. QUARLES. I will then modify the amendment by striking out the words "bureaus or" where they occur.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has the right to do that, the yeas and nays not having been ordered on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin made by him will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words "bureaus or" where they twice occur

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, for a great many years, as is well known to all members of this body, the great commercial interests of the country have been asking for the establishment of a department of commerce, and in response to that demand the Committee on Commerce, charged with such matters, gave very careful consideration to a bill, which I think was reported favorably at the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota if I am not right?

the Senator from Minnesota if I am not right?

Mr. NELSON. It was originally reported, I think, in the Fiftyfifth Congress, by the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], now presiding over the deliberations of this body.

Mr. GALLINGER. That bill went to the Calendar and was not reached for consideration. At the present session it was reintroduced practically as it had been reported, and it again received very careful consideration by the Committee on Commerce. It was reported, is now on the Calendar, and under consideration.

I desire, Mr. President, as a member of that committee, to take a very few moments of the valuable time of the Senate in some observations on this measure, which has been somewhat severely observations on this measure, which has been somewhat severely criticised, and perhaps properly so, by Senators not members of the Committee on Commerce.

Section 3 of the bill declares the purpose and the scope of this new department:

Sec. 3. That it shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and the transportation facilities of the United States; and to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, offices, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified, and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] a moment ago asked why it was that the Department of Labor was included in this bill. He wanted to know whether it was because the committee recognized that the matter the Department of Labor deals with properly belongs to a department of commerce, or whether it was to relieve the pressure upon some other department of the Government. will say to the Senator that, as I understand the matter, it was for the double purpose. First, the Department of Labor deals with statistics, and it is proposed to place the collection and promulgation of statistics in a bureau in the department of commerce, and next because of the fact that the Department under which the Bureau of Labor now is operating is beyond a question overwhelmed with work, and may well be relieved by Congress in the establish-with work, and may well be relieved by Congress in the establishment of a new bureau.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension in one respect. The Department of Labor is not now in any Executive Department; it is isolated; it is by itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon reflection I recall that that is so, and I was mistaken in the statement I made. It is an independent department, and yet not an Executive Department. It was thought wise by the committee to place it under this new depart. thought wise by the committee to place it under this new department, making it a bureau in the ordinary acceptation of the term.

Mr. President, this bill has had, as I before stated, very careful consideration.

Doubtless the committee has made some mistakes in its construction and in the bureaus and departments they have included in it, but it is not a crude bill, and it is not a pro per subject for criticism in that direction. The bill has already been amended, and I think, Mr. President, amended not in a way that improves it. The Census Office has been stricken from the bill. I quite agree with the chairman of the Committee on Census of this body that that office should be included in this meaning the property of the proposed department, and that the statistics which that office is collecting should be made part of this proposed department and was trained. department, and that the statistics which that once is concerning should be made part of this proposed department and put under the bureau of statistics, which this bill proposes to create.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me if I make an inquiry as to the matter on which he has been speaking before he passes to another point?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. BACON. My inquiry is, whether, in the practical operation of the present Department of Labor, there has developed any such inefficiency as requires that its status shall be changed and that it shall be put under one of the great Executive Departments?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I think we will all Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I think we will all agree that no man has been rash enough to assert here or elsewhere that the Department of Labor as at present constituted has not done magnificent work or that it is subject to any criticism whatever; and yet it is an independent department under the law to-day. The committee thought it was wise to include it in this new department. That is all. It may not be wise to do so, but the committee thinks it is. The Senate may think otherwise, and, of course, the committee will yield to the judgment of the Senate. I could not, Mr. President, if I tried, utter words of too great praise for the distinguished statistician who is at the head of the present Department of Labor. His work is beyond praise; it has commended itself to all classes of our people; and I have never heard a word uttered by any man in public life in criticism of the administration of that Department.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me, then, to ask him, as a member of the committee, another question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If, under the present arrangement, there is such distinguished success, would it not be the part of wisdom to allow the present arrangement to continue, rather than to subject the

the present arrangement to continue, rather than to subject the present head of that Department to control which might in some degree impair or interfere with that efficiency, if it is now so perfect?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, that is, of course, a matter of judgment. I have no doubt the same gentleman will be continued at the head of the work who has it now in hand if this change shall be made. As I stated a moment ago, it is a matter for the Senate to decide for itself.

Again, Mr. President, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, which the committee recommended should be included in this new department, has been stricken from the bill, and I think there a mistake has been made. I suppose it is safe for me to say, Mr. President, that the best charts published in the world are published by the Coast and Geodetic Survey; but there is an anomaly in that service being in the Treasury Department, and if it is proposed by some future legislation to transfer it to the Navy Department, as has been hinted, I am clearly of opinion that it would be a mistake to do that.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey, if I properly understand its function, has to do with commerce. It charts the harbors and coast lines almost exclusively, and, while the Navy Department may well give its spare time to the deep-sea soundings, it seems to me that the specific work the Coast and Geodetic Survey has in hand belongs almost exclusively to this new department of commerce, if it shall be created; but the Senate has stricken from the bill that provision, and it very likely will adhere to the conclusion it reached on that point, although I give notice that when the matter comes into the Senate I shall ask for a separate vote on that proposition.

Mr. President, as to the matter of statistics, which is immediately in hand, I do not think the criticisms which were made upon the bill in that regard were well founded. Possibly the provisions are not sufficiently clear; possibly the scope may not be as broad as it ought to be; but the committee had clearly in mind the establishment of a single bureau of statistics, and the bill very pointedly accomplishes that result as I understand. If you turn pointedly accomplishes that result, as I understand. If you turn to page 3, line 16, you will find it is provided:

That the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, now in the Department of State, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the department of commerce and consolidated with and made a part of the Bureau of Statistics, hereinbefore transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce, and the chief of said Bureau of Foreign Commerce shall be the assistant chief of the said Bureau of Statistics; and it shall be the duty of said

Not of two bureaus, as has been contended here, butit shall be the duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, in addition to the duties now prescribed by law, to gather, compile, classify, and publish statistical information showing the condition of the foreign and domestic commerce, of the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, and of the transportation facilities of the United States.

Mr. President, in creating this bureau of statistics the bill proposes that we shall transfer to the department of commerce the Bureau of Statistics now in the Treasury Department; that we shall take the Bureau of Statistics in the State Department and consolidate them, and if Senators will turn to page 5 of the bill they will perceive that we provide that the consular officers shall likewise continue to gather statistics, and that their work shall be turned over to this bureau of statistics in the department of com-

I say, Mr. President, that the criticisms which have been made that we were not sufficiently explicit in saying that there should be one bureau are not, to my mind, justified by the language of the bill; but of course if it can be made more clear by the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the amendment which is now pending, submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], the committee will be glad to have the text of the bill perfected in that respect.

I do not know that I have anything further which I ought to impose upon the Senate in this matter, but I will say further that the committee has had one object in view, and that was to respond to the almost universal demand of the commercial bodies and interests of this country for the establishment of another executive department of the Government to be known as the demand of the commercial bodies. partment of commerce. Their purpose has been to have a bureau of statistics which would accomplish the very results which the Senators who have criticised the bill think it desirable for us to accomplish. In creating this new department we, of necessity, invaded the other departments; we had to take one bureau from one department and another bureau from another department. We had to give this new department some work, and we found some of the other departments so overcrowded that we could well invade their domain and transfer to this new department the work which more properly belongs to a department of commerce than to any existing executive department.

Mr. President, I trust the bill will be speedily voted on. It is, to my mind, a bill which is demanded by the best interests of the people of the United States, and which will receive the commendation of the great commercial bodies of this great commercial country of ours.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer of the Senate received a letter, addressed to him by Mr. Gompers, the president of the American Federation of Labor, with the request that "you may extend the courtesy of submitting this communi-cation to the Senate of the United States." As it relates to the pending bill, and possibly to the proposed pending amendment, if there be no objection, the Chair will comply with the request of this gentleman and submit the letter to the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the

American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C., January 20, 1902.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1902.

Hon. William P. Frye,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

Dear Sir: The bill pending before your honorable body, Senate 569, is, as you know, to establish a department of commerce, with the creation of an office to be known as secretary of the department of commerce. A perusal of the bill shows that it proposes to transfer the Department of Labor to the proposed department of commerce, and it is this particular feature to which your attention is respectfully directed.

As you know, the Bureau of Labor Statistics was created at the earnest solicitation of the organized labor movement of America, and subsequently changed to the higher position of the Department of Labor. This, too, in response to the earnest request of the American Federation of Labor, and the hope has been long entertained that time would demonstrate the wisdom of an independent executive department and its chief officer a secretary with a voice in the councils of the President, affecting matters particularly relating to the great interests of labor.

No keen observer disputes that the all-absorbing and burning question of our time is expressed in the terms, "the labor question." In the effort to establish the rightful relation of the workers to society, in the production of wealth and in its just distribution, is encompassed all the complex questions of our lives.

That justice should be meted out to all the workers, no thoughtful man will deny.

Anything which is not based upon ethical considerations for all, no intelligent trade unionist asks.

Questions often arise in the official family of the President of the United States in which justice, fair dealing, ethics, and the law and its administration must frequently be under consideration, and, unless there is some representative of the workers competent to speak in their name, to advocate their cause, to convey to the executive head and his advisers the laborers' side of labor's contention, he and they must be depriv such a procedure, in the name of American labor, I enter my most solemn protest.

There can be no question that the members of a President's Cabinet are representatives of the employers' and business men's side of industry, commerce, and finance. Our ambassadors and consuls to foreign countries are agents and advocates of the same interests, and there can be no good reason for the creation of a department of commerce, particularly when the Department of Labor, which was created for a particular purpose, in no way germane to a department of commerce, and which it is purposed shall be absorbed thereby to the detriment of the interests of all our people.

It is therefore urgently requested that in this event that the honorable Senate should deem it wise to enact Senate bill 569, that the Department of Labor as now constituted may be eliminated from its provisions. I trust, too, that you may extend the courtesy of submitting this communication to the Senate of the United States.

I have the honor to remain, yours, very respectfully,

SAML. GOMPERS,

President American Federation of Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin as

Mr. TELLER. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] need infer that we are criticising the work of the committee because we do not agree with the bill in all its provisions. I believe it is customary in the Senate for Senators who do not entirely agree with a committee to make sengestions of amendment, and I hope that will be continued. Certainly the proposition of two bureaus of statistics in one department and the chief of one the assistant chief of the other is a new departure in administration. Nobody ever heard of such new departure in administration. Nobody ever heard of such a thing before, and anybody who has had experience in those affairs must know that it will not work. All that has gone out, however. The Senator from New Hampshire seems to think it is a reflection upon the committee to strike it out.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I did not mean to say that.

Mr. TELLER. It sounded like it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I meant to say, and I repeat, that I am of opinion that the language of the bill does not bear out that construction. That is all I meant. It is a difference of opinion between the Senator and me.

Mr. TELLER. It is possible that we are mistaken, but it does not seem so to me. However, that has gone out.

Here is another proposition which I think ought to be considered a minute. As I said before, I am not making objections in shostility to the bill. I expect the bill to pass. I should like to see it in such shape, however, that it will be a proper bill to be passed. On page 5 there is a very proper provision. I do not find fault with it.

And all consular officers of the United States, including consul-generals, consuls, and commercial agents, are hereby required, and it is made a part of their duty, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to gather and compile, from time to time—

That is what they are doing, perhaps without any law, but there is no objection to it. What I object to is this:

From time to time, upon the request of the secretary of commerce.

In other words, you take away from the Secretary of State the power to do this, unless the secretary of commerce requests it to be done, do you not?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think that is the intention, certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that it is, but does it not look a

Mr. LODGE. The line which the Senator has read is my amendment. That is the reason why I have replied to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I think what the Senator had in mind perhaps was that upon the request of the secretary of commerce the Secretary of State should furnish the statistics to this bureau. I think that would be proper, but I hardly think it would be proper to say that he is to make these inquiries upon the request of the secretary of commerce. That work has been done for a number of years, and it has been very valuable.

Mr. LODGE. It has been done under the law—the law establishing the Bureau of Foreign Commerce in the State Department.

Mr. TELLER. I did not know it had been done under the law. Mr. LODGE. I think that is the way it has been done. Mr. TELLER. I did not know whether the law required it or whether it has grown up; but either way, it has been a useful and valuable service.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the Secretary of State has the power to direct the consuls to transmit any information that he desires.

Mr. TELLER. I think it would be better to change this so that, upon the request of the secretary of commerce, he should furnish the statistics to the department of commerce.

Mr. LODGE. Then the Senator would strike out the words "upon the request of the secretary of commerce." That is all that is necessary.

Mr. TELLER. Then I would strike out those words.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to suggest that we can meet the suggestion he has made, and it will not mar the bill in the least in that respect, by striking out, in line 15, the words "upon the request of the secretary of commerce."

Mr. TELLER. I think that will do it.

Mr. NELSON. If that is satisfactory, it will not change the effect of the bill. If the Senator from Colorado will move that amendment, I shall have no objection to it.

amendment, I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. TELLER. I move, then, to strike out in line 15 the words "upon the request of the secretary of commerce."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves an amendment. The Chair will entertain the motion now, although there is an amendment pending.

Mr. TELLER. As this is an informal amendment, I hope it will be entertained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, which will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 15, page 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "upon the request of the secretary of commerce."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word about the statistical bureau. It is a matter I have had considerable of the secretary of the secretary of I have had considerable of the secretary of I have had considerable of the secretary of the secre bly at heart, and I know some other Senators have. I do not know but that we have it now so that it is thoroughly complete and efficient. I can hardly tell by hearing the bill read, and nobody else can, for that matter.

What I think we need is that when the Director of the Mint shall make up his estimate of the amount of gold, when the Comptroller of the Currency shall make up his estimate or his statement, that somebody, before those statements become published or become a part of a report, shall oversee them. I do not know whether this bill provides for that or not. I do not know whether it would be regarded as offensive to the bill if I were to suggest it. I believe that is what we ought to have.

Mr. NELSON. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I think the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin will reach the point to which he has referred.

Mr. TELLER. The other day I understood the Senator from Missouri to indicate that to his mind the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics had control of these estimates of other departments. I Statistics had control of these estimates of other departments. I challenge that. I think perhaps he did not mean that. He meant to say, I guess, that the Chief of the Bureau was acting under authority of law. That is right. But he has no power over the Director of the Mint. He could not change his figures if he wanted to, except to change them in his own report. He could see that the Director of the Mint made his figures conform to those of the Bureau of Statistics. That is where the trouble comes in.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I should like to say a word before the amendment is acted upon. As I understand, it is now proposed, by the scope of this bill, to transfer to the new department all matters relating to statistical information, and the ment all matters relating to statistical information, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to give this new secretary the power to subordinate all other departments to this department, because, whatever he asks from them they are bound to furnish, if I understand the purport of the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. All other departments?
Mr. ALLISON. All other departments. That is to say, if the secretary of commerce wishes any information or statistics as respects anything connected with another department, it shall be the duty of that department to furnish it.

Now, I doubt very much whether it is worth while for us to insert in this bill a provision of that character, even applying to the departments. It is true that the amendment originally proposed has been amended so as to strike out bureaus, but that does not meet my objection thoroughly. I understand now that this bill transfers the Bureau of Statistics from the Treasury Department to the department of commerce, the object being to have that department do what the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department is now doing. Am I right in that respect?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly the Senator is right. If he will allow me in this connection, I wish to say to him that in one respect he misapprehends the bill. There is no attempt to transfer any statistical division of the Government, except what is known as the Bureau of Foreign Commerce, which used to be called the Bureau of Statistics, in the State Department. That is transferred to the new department and consolidated with the Bureau of Stato the new department and consonated with the Bureau of Statistics, now in the Treasury Department, with a view of making one entire bureau of statistics. That is the only consolidation. The bill does not attempt to enlarge the scope of the work that is now conferred upon the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad to have the information. That was really my understanding, and I intended to state it.

Now, if that be true, as I understand it to be true, I submit that the amendment now offered by the Senator from Wisconsin is not necessary, because it is the duty of the Bureau of Statistics to colnecessary, because it is the duty of the Bureau of Statistics to collate and compile the information which it is now proposed to provide for by specific statute. I have before me the requirements with respect to the Bureau of Statistics, and I find that they embrace practically everything connected with our internal and external commerce, and they also contain every proper thing, I should think, as respects the industries of the country.

Mr. NELSON. I may say, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him right here, that that was the very reason why we thought it was appropriate to the department of commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. The Senator does not understand me to oppose this transfer or to oppose his bill. I suppose a little bit of criticism on this bill as it occurs to Senators on the floor can not be considered as hostile to the measure.

not be considered as hostile to the measure.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Iowa read that sec-

Mr. CULLOM. Let us hear it read.
Mr. ALLISON. I will not read the whole of it, because it is an elaborate arrangement and seems to be very well prepared.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, annually prepare a report—

That is what he is to do-

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, annually prepare a report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries to the close of the fiscal year. Such accounts shall comprehend all goods, wares, and merchandise exported from the United States to other countries; all goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States from other countries, and all navigation employed in the foreign trade of the United States; which facts shall be stated according to the principles and in the manner hereby directed.

And then the manner is set forth in considerable detail, which I will not read.

Then another section provides what the collectors of customs shall do in order to enable him to prepare these statistics, and there are a great many other things which he is obliged to do.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, prepare and publish monthly reports of the exports and imports of the United States, including the quantities and values of goods warehoused or withdrawn from warehouse, and such other statistics relative to the trade and industry of the country as the Secretary of the Treasury may consider expedient.

Now, I submit to the Senator from Minnesota that it will be impossible, as I conceive it, for this new secretary to secure these statistics in any way except from the Treasury Department. He will not have in his department that upon which this information can be founded or from which it can be derived. All this infor-mation as respects exports and imports is necessarily in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury and within the purview of that Secretary. So I think there will be difficulty in transferring this particular duty from the Secretary of the Treasury to the new

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to mean that because the Secretary has to get this information from collectors of customs, therefore it ought to remain under the Treasury Department?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; the Senator should not so understand

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator kindly explain to me what the objection is? Mr. ALLISON. I undertake to say that it is not a practicable thing to undertake to transfer to the new bureau all the warehouses of the United States which contain foreign goods. practicable to transfer to the new secretary the duty of making a monthly statement of the value of goods in warehouse or withdrawn from warehouses, except he obtains the information through the Secretary of the Treasury, unless the new secretary is to take upon himself the control and direction of the importation of merchandise and the collection of revenue thereupon.

Mr. LODGE I understand and the Control and the Control

Mr. LODGE. I understand—and the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—the officers in charge of the warehouses and the of 1 am wrong—the officers in charge of the warehouses and the collectors of customs, etc., now transmit these statistics to the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics. The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics does not collect them himself at the warehouses and ports. They are transmitted to him by those officers.

Mr. ALLISON. They can be by law. They are not now authorized to be transmitted to the Bureau by any statute I know of.

Mr. LODGE. I thought that was what the Senator read.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics is in communication with these collectors for the pure Statistics is in communication with these collectors for the purpose of securing information.

Mr. LODGE. I mean that the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics has a large mass of statistics, as we all know, gathered from the collectors of our ports and from warehouses, etc. Now, he does not himself go around to the various ports and get them. They must be transmitted to him by those officers.

Mr. ALLISON. That may be, but they are now transmitted necessarily to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; and by him sent to the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.
Mr. LODGE. Now suppose the Bureau of Statistics were moved into the department of commerce. We are proposing to transmit from the State Department the statistics gathered by Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Mr. LODGE. Why can not the Treasury transmit those gathered from collectors?

Mr. ALLISON. Possibly it can. I am only saying that possibly there will be a little difficulty in providing that the head of one department shall transfer monthly to the head of another department, or to a bureau of another department all these statistics. It will require duplication, undoubtedly, but I make no special point on that.

The law continues:

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall prepare an annual statement of all merchandise passing in transit through the United States to foreign countries, each description of merchandise, so far as practicable, warehoused, withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, for exportation, for transportation to other districts, and remaining in the warehouse at the end of each fiscal year.

Of course this can all be furnished by the Treasury Department to the new department, if necessary, and that is the way it will have to obtain it—through customs officers and not through any officers that the secretary of commerce can possibly employ.

Now, then, in addition to that, the law provides:

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall collect, digest, and arrange, for the use of Congress, the statistics of the manufactures of the United States, their localities, sources of raw material, markets, exchanges with the producing regions of the country, transportation of products, wages, and such other conditions as are found to affect their prosperity.

Now, that is all done under the law by this bureau which is to be transferred to the new department, and I submit that with this statement it is unnecessary for us to inject into this new statute mandatory provisions. I think a head of a department when called upon for statistical information will furnish it as a matter of comity, and I do not think one secretary should be subordinated to another in this regard. Therefore I find more ample ordinated to another in this regard. Therefore I find more ample provision made here than I had supposed the other day when I was speaking somewhat of the importance of what the Senator now proposes and what is proposed in this bill, and to which I cordially agree. I have no fault to find with it, but I think the method now adopted is one which has proved satisfactory and which, with an efficient chief of bureau, will gather under this new secretary all the information from every source available which will be required in this annual statement.

which will be required.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to assemble to does not disturb him.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Whether the Bureau of Statistics remains where t and amplified here?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. Now, we have gone to work and imposed on the census the task of collecting the same statistics that this Bureau is collecting from month to month and year to year. Why should we duplicate this work? Why can we not in some way consolidate the statistical work instead of having it done twice?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Massachusetts under-

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Massachusetts understands me to propose duplication—Mr. LODGE. Oh, I do not.
Mr. ALLISON. I must certainly disabuse his mind. I am endeavoring to do exactly what the committee is endeavoring to do, but I am criticising now a suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin, which I agreed to practically in advance the other day, because I did not know then in detail what I see now on looking the state of the stat ing at the statute-that there is ample and complete power now to gather all that is possible to be gathered by the new secretary. Therefore it is that I want the secretary to have the widest scope, and that the best comity, if I may use that term, shall prevail between the secretaries, and not have clerks of one department write letters to the other, and make it the duty of that other to respond thereto.

Mr. QUARLES. If it will not int I should like to make a suggestion. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Iowa,

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.
Mr. QUARLES. The fact that the statistics gathered in that bureau—as the Senator has read from the statute—are valuable and accurate does not meet the case, I suggest to the Senator Let me illustrate from the statute which he has just read. It requires the Bureau of Statistics to gather full information regarding manufactures, for instance. Is there any necessity in the decennial year, when the Census is expressly charged with the duty of gathering those identical statistics, of having the work duplicated by that Bureau? Under my amendment, as the Senator will see, there would be a discretion left in this officer to suspend the work of the Bureau for the particular year when the Census is charged with the duty of gathering those identical statistics, and there is no object in paying for them twice.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree thoroughly with the suggestion made by the Senator, but that is a criticism upon the census bill which we passed two years ago. If it is true that these statistics are as comprehensive as the statistics of the census, then we should not have provided for them; but I think the decennial census is intended for a wider and perhaps more important purpose—that of showing in detail the growth and development of our country for each decade, so that we can compare the census of 1900 with the census of 1890 and ascertain as respects our agricultural, our manufacturing, our farming, and our mining production the progress and development made in ten years.

Therefore, decennially we have in the past—it may not have been wise—provided for an enlarged and specific and detailed statement, which it is not expected will be done in the Bureau of Statistics. It is, as a matter of fact, impossible that it shall be done, and it is impossible that any department can do it every We shall have expended, when we have finished this decennial census, ten or twelve million dollars, because every home has been visited, every farm has been visited, every manufacturing industry has been visited, and the details have been shown, for this decennial period, as to the number of men employed in each. as to the wages paid in each, so far as practicable, because all that information is difficult to secure.

I suggested yesterday that when the Senator from Wisconsin brings in his elaborate provision here for a continuation of the census, without regard to decennial periods, making it a bureau or an office in some one of the departments of the Government, then is the time to arrange for that class of statistics specifically and, perhaps, more in detail for the imposition of new duties, if there are additional duties required, upon the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics.

Therefore it is, Mr. President, that I would rather we would Therefore it is, Mr. President, that I would rather we would not now deal with the new powers that are proposed here as respects the gathering of statistics, but that we should rest for the moment, at least until we get this new department into play, upon the very comprehensive statute and the comprehensive powers that are now given to the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, which Bureau is to be here transferred. That is my general idea.

I may be mistaken about it, but I undertake to say that it will be impossible for us each and every year to deal at large with the question of our occupations, our wages, our labor, our manufactures, our mines, our forests, and our agriculture in detail as they are dealt with every ten years. So, after further considera-tion, I believe it is unwise for us now to legislate whereby we shall enlarge the duties and powers of this new secretary so as to make every other Secretary who happens to have a statistical bureau in his department subordinate to the new secretary, as will be the case if this amendment is agreed to.

I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will withdraw the amendment and allow the law to stand, as I think it does stand, with comprehensive powers as respects the gathering of statistics. I am sure that every Secretary of any department will gladly furnish the statistics in detail when called for, and they will furnish them, and do furnish them, in their annual reports, which are always transmuted right into the Statistical Abstract.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I understand it we have had censuses of late which were intended to chronicle the decennial growth of which the Senator has spoken. We added one subject growth of which the Senator has spoken. We added one subject to another until by the time the census was published the statistics were completely obsolete, and nobody thought of using them. In fact they became, except for the statistics of population, such gloomy failures, that is, for current knowledge, that at tion, such gloomy failures, that is, for current knowledge, that at the last census we undertook to change, and did almost completely change our system. We provided that we should have a very limited number of subjects and get the returns in two years, and then that the other subjects on which we wanted detailed statements should be referred to a permanent bureau to report upon them from time to time. That seems to me to be an intelligent way of dealing with it.

If we are to have a permanent bureau to deal with these statistics, why not concentrate it in one hand? We have bureaus of statistics scattered about in almost every department of the Government publishing and republishing—many of them—the same information. I do not care whether the central bureau is put under one department or another, but it seems to me we ought to have one bureau of statistics and that all statistics should be sent to that bureau, no matter where you place the bureau. Then we shall have one issue. We will not duplicate. We will not spend twice as much money as we need. We will get reports on different subjects from time to time with some degree of freshness. We shall save more money and get better returns, it seems to me, in that way than any other.

The plea I am making is the old plea that I have heard made here by many Senators on other subjects, for a concentration of all the bureaus in the Government which are doing the same work.

The census, which is the great statistical bureau of the Government, it seems to me, ought to be the nucleus around which all the others should gather, and the census, the Bureau of Sta-tistics, the Bureau of Commercial Statistics, and the Bureau of Foreign Statistics should all be grouped together under one head, and we should have all the statistics gathered in the different departments transmitted by the heads of those departments to the central bureau. I do not think anyone can question that we would get better results very much quicker, and that we would simplify and cheapen the whole of this important branch of the

I welcomed this bill because it seemed to be making an advance in that precise direction. I was very sorry to see that the census had been stricken out of it. I think the census ought to be there. I think the Bureau of Statistics ought to be there. I tried to arrange the part relating to the Bureau of Foreign Commerce so that all that was statistical might be delivered by the State Department to the new department.

It seems to me that we ought to apply the same system to the Treasury—that let that which is statistical in the Treasury be transmitted to the new bureau formed under the new department. That, it seems to me, should be the true object for which we should try to legislate.

As I understand it, the amendment of the Senator from Wis-consin is predicated on the return of the census to this department, but wherever we put the census I think we ought to aim by our legislation to bring all the other statistical bureaus around it and consolidate them with it, so far as it is possible to be done.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, one word. The Senator from Massachusetts seems to think that I am opposed to what he is for.

Mr. LODGE. Not the least of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with him in everything he says appertaining to the consolidation of the different statistical bureaus aming to the consolidation of the different statistical bureaus wherever it is practicable. That is done now by this bill, and I am for it. I do not object to it.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, what is the particular provision to which he does object?

Mr. ALLISON. I will endeavor to state the particular provision to which I object. It is that now having ample provision.

sion to which I object. It is that now, having ample provision already made, as I understand it, this amendment which I see before me in the hands of the Senator and which he is ready to comment upon I have no doubt, when I take my seat, provides that the secretary of commerce shall have complete control—that means something—of the gathering and distributing of statistical information. Now, that is number one. I submit that that goes beyond the scope of the original purpose and intent of the bill, which I am for and which I am going in my feeble way to

This secretary is to have all this within his scope and purview, to begin with. He is then to get it first from original sources, if he chooses. Under the scope of this amendment, as I understand it—I may not be able to understand it; I hope to have it explained if I do not—if the secretary chooses, instead of entering upon an original investigation, he can call upon the head of any other department for information which he is to have the complete control of, and it is made the duty of the heads of the departments to furnish to him what statistical data they have

Now, to answer the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], my criticism is that, in establishing this department of commerce, we had better proceed in such a way as to give the secretary additional powers, if he needs them, but not for the moment to give him the powers that now devolve upon the heads of other departments which are transferred to him by this bill. Here is an elaborate statute about the Bureau of Statistics. If we want to amend that statute, if it is not comprehensive enough, let us deal with it after we have made this segregation, if I may use that term, of bureaus from one department to another. That is my

On yesterday I was rather of the opinion that something ought to be inserted here, and I do not know but that I said so to the Senator from Wisconsin; but when I came to examine the statute as respects the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, I found a comprehensive and carefully prepared statute, under which we have acted for twenty years without any great difficulty, and under which we have had numerous Statistical Abstracts of great value. They may not be as comprehensive as they ought to be or will be with this new head, who, it is to be supposed, will give particular attention to it and see to it that we have a volume which will contain all the information respecting our industries and occupa-tions. What I want to do is to rest upon the statutes that we have and to transfer this Bureau as proposed to the new department of commerce; that is all.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator is in favor, then, of establishing the new department?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from West Virginia must have

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from West Virginia must have been absent a part of the time while I have been speaking.

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir; I have been here all the time.

Mr. ALLISON. I have been trying to say over and over again that I am in favor of this bill, and I have been trying, in a feeble way, perhaps, to suggest amendments which are proper. But just now I am absolutely in defense of the committee, because the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] proposes an amendment, and I am rather inclined to ask the committee to resist the amendment because there is enough in the bill now for our present purposes. ment, because there is enough in the bill now for our present pur-

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand that there is no Senator on the other side who is ready to go on to-day with the discussion of the Philippine bill. I have no desire to press it unreasonably or unduly, and I shall not therefore urge the consideration of it to-day. I will express again the hope that Senators will so far oblige me as to continue the discussion as steadily as may be from day to day as the bill comes up.

I promised the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge], who has a very important matter which he wishes to deal with, that at the hour of 2 o'clock, when I took the floor on the Philippine bill, I would move to proceed to the consideration of executive

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside? Mr. LODGE. It, of course, would not be affected by a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NELSON. I trust that the Senator from Massachusetts will not move to go into executive session. I hope he will let us continue for a little longer the consideration of this bill.

Mr. LODGE. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing the let the Philipping below the process of the pro

Mr. LODGE. I do not feel, in justice to that Senator, who I understand will be here in one moment, that I ought to fail to make the motion as I promised.

Mr. Beverioge entered the Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amended and passed the bill (S. 1115) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Cavalry, and that the same be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that will be done by unanimous

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the votes whereby the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. Should we also reconsider the vote amending the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The whole thing will be recommitted to the committee. The bill and the report will be sent to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill having been recommitted, the amendment follows.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not.

Mr. HOAR. It has not gone to the House. That is the reason why I made the motion. why I made the motion.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I listened to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] with a great deal of interest and a great deal of pleasure. I do not know of anyone who is in the legislative public service who, taken all in all, is as familiar with the various departments of the Government as he is, and I am accustomed to defer to his opinion. But I hardly think the criticism. various departments of the Government as he is, and I am accustomed to defer to his opinion. But I hardly think the criticism which he makes upon the amendment proposed by my colleague is a just one. There are a number of bureaus transferred from various departments to this proposed department of commerce, including the Bureau of Statistics. The duties and powers of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics are established by statute. They are very broad; but they are not interfered with, as I understand it, by this bill at all. Mr. ALLISON. Not in the slightest degree.

Mr. SPOONER. Nor do I understand it to be the purpose of this amendment to interfere with them. The duties and functions of, I suppose, every bureau transferred from any department to this proposed new department are defined by law, although many of those duties, and perhaps nearly all, are discharged under the direction of the particular Cabinet officer in whose department they now are. This proposed bill works no change in that respect. It provides: It provides:

That all laws prescribing the work and defining the duties of the several bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service by this act transferred to and made a part of the department of commerce shall, so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, remain in full force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

It is simply a transfer of these bureaus from one department to another more in harmony with the general purpose for which the new department is created. The law in relation to the Bureau of statistics, I understand, is not changed by this proposed bill, nor do I think it is proposed by the amendment introduced by my colleague to change it. That amendment is limited to the collection of statistics. Of course, there are a large number of bureaus here transferred which deal with specific subjects, as the Fish Commission, the Light-House Board, and the Bureau of Navigation. A large number of bureaus are transferred with the same officers,

A large number of bureaus are transferred with the same officers, the same administration, the same functions to perform. Now, as to the matter of statistics, my colleague, moved of course by the general expression which was made here the other day in favor of a centralization of the functions of collecting and publishing statistics, has drawn this amendment relating only to that particular subject:

Perhaps that language is a little stronger than need be, although that means only administrative control; I think it does not mean any more than to say that these duties shall be discharged under the direction of these various officers, except in one particular:

Shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department—

That is, to the work of gathering and distributing statistics to be obtained, as pointed out by law. This power ought to be given to a Cabinet officer whose department is charged with the general duty of collecting, distributing, and publishing statistics, because it will enable him to stop in some measure the duplication of statistics.

When this bill was introduced, the Geological Survey was transferred to this department of commerce. There were some good reasons, it seemed to me, why it should be transferred. If it had remained in the bill this power would have enabled the secretary of commerce to prevent a duplication of some investigations and reports of a statistical nature which confessedly now at very large expense are being duplicated.

In other words, it was stated here the other day, I think by the Senator from Iowa, that under the present system at large expense statistics covering the same subjects are being taken and published by different departments. It is costly and it is absurd. I know it was the general purpose of this amendment to give to the secretary of commerce control over the work of gathering and distributing statistical information, to the end that he might, as far as the subjects came within his jurisdiction, put an end to this duplication. It only gives him general administrative control, in my judgment. If it does more than that, it does too much, perhaps and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work.

He can not consolidate the bureau; he can abolish the bureau. Bureaus which have hitherto existed under the law, transferred to this department of commerce to discharge the same function, are still to continue, but in the matter of statistical distribution he is given control, and I think for a wise purpose, and we are to assume that it will be exercised for a wise purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it will be.
Mr. SPOONER. I thought the Senator objected to thatand to distribute or consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them.

Not authority to compel them by request to engage in an original investigation to suit his purpose. They are not subordinated to him or to his department in any way. The Department of Agriculture collects a great deal of very valuable statistical information. It can better be collected by that Department than by any other.

Mr. ALLISON. It is all included in the Abstract.

Mr. SPOONER. I know it is all included in the Abstract, but the point is to concentrate, if possible, the collection of statistical information. Why should not the secretary of the department of commerce be authorized by law to call upon other departments for statistical information obtained by them? Is there anything at all offensive to a department in that language?

And it is hereby made the duty of such departments to furnish such information.

That is, statistical information only. That does not put any department in any way, in the discharge of their general duties and the general duties of administration, under the control of this proposed secretary of commerce. He should have a right to call proposed secretary of commerce. He should have a right to call on the departments, it seems to me, and it is a correlative provision. It requires them to respond to his request. We add to the duties of the departments all the time. They are statutory officials. They are created by the law. It is not any invasion of the dignity of the departments to provide that for a general public purpose, as to the mere matter of statistics, the department of commerce shall be at liberty to levy contributions, so to speak, upon all the other departments which collect statistics which should be massed and published as a whole so to speak, upon all the other departments which collect statistics which should be massed and published as a whole.

I fail to see, unless it be in the use of the word "complete," warrant for a just criticism of this amendment. It leaves the bureaus with the same functions. The law is continued; the officials and employees are transferred to the new department at their present grade and salaries. The duties are the same, except that when you come to the mere matter of collecting statistics—the distribution of statistics—that is put under the general conthe distribution of statistics—that is put under the general control of the secretary of commerce. Does my friend think that that is offensive or would be properly offensive to any other department?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this amendment was offered this morning, and my attention had not been called to it. The language "having complete control of the gathering of statistics," I think, might lead to embarrassment. I know perfectly well that there is a great deal of statistical information that is valuable, I will say, to the farmers of the country that will not be found in an annual publication such as this will be; and yet I am afraid that it will be considered that the secretary of commerce, having control of all statistics coming within the purview of this law, will gather up a great many things that are now furnished—monthly bulletins, if you please, monthly communication by other departments—that are of value and are needed by the various industries and occurrences of our country. Therefore no recticions dustries and occupations of our country. Therefore my criticism would apply to that as well.

I do not object to the consolidation of the bureaus. I think that power is a very wise one. The census provision is a matter about which I am indifferent. I wished to have it stricken out, because I wanted the perfected bill of the Senator to appear and deal with it. I care nothing about that. I am willing to have these bureaus consolidated. Ithink the Secretary might very well have that power. But I do not think it is a wise thing to cut off, if need be, certain statistical information that may be gathered from time to time by other departments.

Mr. SPOONER. Does this do it?

Mr. ALLISON. It may do it. I am not sure that it does it, but I do not see the necessity of making here an ironclad provision. It is possible that as a courteous request it would be complied with by the other departments. I only made that criticism because it seemed to me the other departments would be subordinate to it. I should be glad if we could so finally provide for this new department without too far intrenching upon the duties and powers of the other departments of the Government, and, therefore, in the general way proposed here for the transfer of bureaus with their present authority and powers I agree. That is my criticism in brief.

Mr. SPOONER. The amendment reads:

That the secretary of commerce shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department.

Mr. ALLISON. But nearly everything is "confided to his department." He is to have control of all the industries and all the commerce of this country, external and internal.

Mr. NELSON. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that the secretary of commerce will have nothing to do with the subject of agriculture. [Laughter.] That is not in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad the Senator has suggested that, but I had already observed it accidentally. [Laughter.] I fell upon that situation myself; and therefore I do not know precisely how it occurred to the Senator. But I think it is wise for us to generalize so far as we can, in transferring bureaus. Transfer the eralize, so far as we can, in transferring bureaus. Transfer the census, if you will, although it will amount to nothing unless you devolve upon the present Director some new scheme or project or

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, Mr. President, no one in the Senate is opposed to this bill, as I understand, but everyone here wants to perfect it as far as it can be done. I understand that amendment to refer to the bureaus which are transferred by this bill to the new department, and the secretary of that department ought to have control of his own bureaus and the matters with which they deal. Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I certainly feel great diffidence in discussing a question which relates to legislative history, especially if such discussion would make it necessary for me in any way to disagree with the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALISON]. I feel, however, that the Senator from Iowa has not gathered the object and purpose we have in this amendment, which is not at all to interfere with the gathering of these statistics. which is not at all to interiere with the gathering of these statistics. They are gathered now by several bureaus and edited and published by them. The principle of this amendment, stated briefly, is simply this: There can be only one standard of truth. To say that there could be more would be to bring reproach upon the truth and to recall the old query of Chadband, "What is truth?" The secretary of commerce will, under this bill, have dumped into his office a vast amount of this statistical information of the secretary property much of it amounting to a durlication. tion, very much of it amounting to a duplication.

The question involved in this amendment, as I understand it, is whether the several reports of the several bureaus should go out to the people separately, containing all these duplications, or whether that material so acquired should be taken by this new secretary, reviewed, edited, collated, and then sent out without duplications as the very facts, final, consistent, and conclusive.

As said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] the other day, these several bureaus do not always account.

day, these several bureaus do not always agree. It will be the province of the new secretary, I suppose, to take all this information and send it out to the people, backed by the authenticity that it can only have by such a high source of truth and veracity as a department of this Government. So that we would save money, we would not reproduce the same thing, and we should secure accuracy. Those qualities lend the chief value to all statistics.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary. In line 6, page 4 of the printed bill, strike out all after the words "Statistics and" down to and including the words "United States," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment follows the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell], which was adopted before the Senator came in.

The Secretary. The words proposed to be inserted are as follows:

That the secretary of commerce shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them, and it is hereby made the duty of such departments to furnish such information when so requested; and said secretary of commerce may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, so as to raise the question directly, I move to strike out the words "and it is hereby made the duty of such departments to furnish such information when so requested"—the whole of that sentence. That is the exact objection of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and I move to amend by striking out those words.

Mr. GALLINGER. How will it then read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment, after the words "obtained by them," by striking out "and it is hereby made the duty of such departments to furnish such information when so requested" when so requested."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pettus] to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Quarles].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin as amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the whole clause be read together as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will again be read, includ-The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will again be read, including the amendments to the amendment which have been adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; the amendments already agreed to from the beginning of the sentence "That the Bureau of Foreign Commerce," etc.

The Secretary. Beginning in line 23, on page 3, section 4, of the bill, after the word "commerce," if amended as proposed, it will read:

That the Bureau of Foreign Commence, now in the Department of State, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the department of commerce and consolidated with and made a part of the Bureau of Statistics, hereinbefore transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the department of commerce. And the two shall constitute one bureau, to be called the bureau of statistics, with a chief of the bureau and one assistant. That the secretary of commerce shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work, and to distribute or consolidate the same, as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them; and said secretary of commerce may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the part of the amendment which reads, "said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus." If that language refers to the two bureaus which have been consolidated in the sentence before, it is incorrect; if it refers to all the bureaus which have been placed under it, probably it would not be incorrect. What was the intention of the Senator from Wis-

Mr. QUARLES. The intention of the amendment was to include all the bureaus covered into this new department.

Mr. COCKRELL. And not to refer to the two bureaus that were brought in from the State Department and from the Treasury Department and consolidated into one?

Mr. QUARLES. I suppose the object was to give the secretary control of the manner in which this work should be done and how the statistics should be arranged.

Mr. COCKRELL. We do not want two bureaus in one, with two chiefs, one an assistant to the other. That was expressly disowned and disavowed in the discussion. I do not want any language used here that may be interpreted in that way. amendment reads:

And to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same.

The question is whether we ought to give the secretary power to consolidate bureaus.

Mr. QUARLES. No; that is merely to consolidate the statistical work. It does not reach the bureaus. I selected that word "work" so as to leave the bureaus to their ordinary functions.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then, am I to understand that the words "to distribute and consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interest" refer only to the work and not to the bureau?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes, sir; that was my intention. Mr. SPOONER. I think since the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Mr. SPONEIL. I think since the senator from hissouri Mr. COCKRELL] has called attention to the amendment it might be improved by a further amendment. Suppose we say "the bureaus in this act transferred to the said department," so that the head of it, in gathering a certain line of statistics, could employ the proper bureau. It would simply give him general authority in that records? in that respect.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it does that now. The amendment

To this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same.

If that refers to the work, it is all right about distributing and consolidating; but if it refers to the bureaus, I do not think any secretary ought to have such power.

Mr. FORAKER. I supposed the great purpose of this amendment was to consolidate the bureaus, to have only one bureau of statistics.

Mr. QUARLES. That has already been done.
Mr. FORAKER. I do not understand that it has been done. I understand the Senator from Missouri does not want the bureaus consolidated; he does not want the secretary to have the power to consolidate.

Mr. COCKRELL. No. The amendment I have offered made it absolutely conclusive that it was to be one bureau, with one chief and one assistant, not two chiefs, one an assistant to the other.

Mr. FORAKER. I should be glad to have that distinctly brought out, because I think we ought to have only one bureau of statistics and have the consolidation of all into one. We ought to have a consolidation of the work, and it ought, of course, to be under the direction of the secretary at the head of that department.

Mr. COCKRELL. If this interpretation is correct, then the

Mr. COCKRELL. If this interpretation is correct, then the secretary will have no authority to consolidate two bureaus.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is very evident that this is a very comprehensive amendment to a very important bill, and it is somewhat complicated, I judge, from the remarks made by Senators around me. I will suggest, therefore, that this amendment be printed—I think it has not been printed in the form in which the mover desires to have it presented—and that its further consideration be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. May I make a further suggestion, that the bill, with all the amendments which have been adopted, be also printed?

Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. COCKRELL. It ought to be printed as it has been amended, so that we can see what it proposes to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] asks unanimous consent that there be a reprint of the bill, with all the amendments adopted to the present

NELSON. And also that the pending amendment be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And that the pending amendment be printed. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I want to go along with the other amendments. I move to strike out the Department of Laborators this EU.

bor from this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 3, section 4, line 19, after the word "that," it is proposed to strike out "the Department of Labor, and.

Mr. CULLOM. If the bill is disposed of for the present, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. Have the words just read been stricken out? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw his motion for the present?

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw it for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state, in reply to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], that the amendment referred to has not been adopted. It is pending.

EXECUTION OF LEGAL INSTRUMENTS IN THE PHILIPPINES, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5814) to provide for the execution in the Philippine Islands and in Porto Rico of deeds for land situate in the District of Columbia, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. Gallinger, Mr. McMillan, and Mr. Martin were appointed.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the Senate of January 24, 1901, the Chair appoints Mr. Burrows, the junior Senator from Michigan, to read Washington's Farewell Address on February 22 next.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. QUARLES and Mr. Pettus members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., under the requirements of section 1327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

VISITORS TO ANNAPOLIS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. Gallinger and Mr. Taliaferro members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., under the requirements of the act of February 14, 1879.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 23, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 22, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRESS REPORTERS ON THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 82.

Resolved, That section 2. Rule XXXVI, be amended by striking out the words "and one to the United Press reporters" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one to the Sun Press Association and one to the Scripps-McRae League."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules.

The question was considered; and the resolution was agreed to. On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EXECUTION IN PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND PORTO RICO OF DEEDS TO REAL ESTATE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following House bill with Senate amendments: H. R. 5814. An act to provide for the execution in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico of deeds of land situate in the District of Columbia

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS. It is simply to put the matter into conference.

The motion of Mr. JENKINS was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. Jenkins, Mr. BLACKBURN, and Mr. COWHERD.

ADMISSION TO THE HALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom by resolution of the House of December 19, 1901, was referred the subject of admissions to the Hall of the House, have had the same under consideration, and report the following as an additional paragraph to Rule XXXIV, to be numbered 2:

There shall be excluded at all times from the Hall of the House of Representatives and the cloakrooms all persons not entitled to the privilege of the floor during the session, except that until fifteen minutes of the hour of the meeting of the House persons employed in its service, accredited members of the press entitled to admission to the press gallery, and other persons on request of members, by card or in writing, may be admitted.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the commission that had in charge the refurnishing of the House drafted this rule and submitted it with their report. The House, by resolution, referred the proposed new rule to the Committee on Rules, and upon con-the proposed new rule to the Committee on Rules, and upon consideration that committee has unanimously agreed upon this report. It is in the interest of the comfort of the members, of the health of the members, and is in the interest of public economy.

If this rule shall be adopted, there can be no admission to the floor of the House at any time, except to those parties who, under the rules, are specially named; that is to say, members, ex-members, and others, newspaper men entitled to admission to the gallors, and such other paragraps as many be admitted on the reconst of lery, and such other persons as may be admitted on the request of lery, and such other persons as may be admitted on the request or members, either in writing or by card.

Every member is familiar with the situation now—that this Hall is occupied every morning from 9 o'clock until a quarter of 12 by persons who come here for various reasons, trying, I think, to get out of the cold and to have a comfortable seat for a little while. It is not an unusual thing for a member to come in, desir-ing to sit down at his desk, and find his chair being occupied by somebody who has a cigar on one corner of the desk and is taking his ease, to the discomfort of the member.

And, in addition to that, the members of the House are entitled to come to a House at 12 o'clock, where they have to sit for five hours, that has been unoccupied up to that time. It is in the interest of their health that that should be so. It is also in the interest of public economy that a House furnished as this is now in a manner worthy the representatives of the American people, should be kept in as good condition as possible.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Sometimes, when delegations of schools in charge of teachers and others come here—sometimes a thousand miles, per-haps 40 or 50 of them together—will each one have to have a card to get upon the floor?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all. The gentleman has, no doubt, issued gallery cards many a time for "Mr. A B and friends." One card would admit a delegation of that kind. I was about to say that this would work no disadvantage to anybody, for people who come legitimately to inspect the House will be admitted at all times on a member's card. It will not be difficult to secure a member's card. The Doorkeeper will have them prepared, and members can have them in their committee rooms or in their pockets, if they choose. It seems to me that he rule ought to appeal to the good judgment of every member of the House.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It seems to me there ought to be provided some reception room where members can meet persons who wish to see them during a session. As the situation is at present, when members are called out to see ladies and gentlemen they can only see them in the corridors, and it is very inconvenient. They have to stand and wait sometimes an hour or an hour and a half to see a member.

Mr. DALZELL. The only difficulty that I can see is that we have no room to set apart.

Mr. RIXEY. Would it not be possible for the Committee on Rules to set aside some place for that purpose?

Mr. CLARK. In the cutting up of the old library you have many good committee rooms. Why can not you send the Ways and Means Committee out there to one of the best rooms and take the present Ways and Means Committee rooms for a receptive.

and Means Committee out there to one of the best rooms and take the present Ways and Means Committee room for a reception room or send the Committee on Appropriations out there?
Mr. DALZELL. The answer to that suggestion is that neither of those committees would be willing to go.
Mr. CLARK. Well, we might make them go. They are subject to the orders of the House.
Mr. RIXEY. Would it not be possible or proper that persons wishing to speak with members might come into the lobby back of the Speaker's chair? Something similar to this is allowed in wishing to speak with memoers might come into the lobby back of the Speaker's chair? Something similar to this is allowed in the Senate. Why should we not be allowed the privilege of inviting into the lobby, upon our cards, persons whom we desire to see?

Mr. DALZELL. Of course the arrangement suggested by the gentleman is "possible." Whether it would be expedient or not I do not know. It is "possible," of course, for us to make any rule we may please disposing of the space here, inside the Hall or outside.

Mr. RIXEY. I think there ought to be some provision of that kind.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania think the part of that part of the rule which shuts out newspaper men at 11.45 will work great inconvenience to members of the House? Mr. DALZELL. They are already shut out under our existing

Mr. CLARK. I know that; but they ought not to be shut out. I speak not for their convenience especially, but for the convenience of members. If they are shut out fifteen minutes before the House meets, they will be sending in their cards to us and getting members to go out and stand in the corridors and perhaps catch their death of cold.

Mr. DALZELL. We do not change the rule in that respect. Mr. DALZELL. We do not change the rule in that respect. Mr. CLARK. I know that; but I think the rule ought to be changed, because most of the members get in here before the House meets, and if the reporters were allowed to come in and see them when they wish to do so it would be more convenient all around.

Mr. SIMS. I can see some force in the reasons suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], but when delegations visit the Capitol of the United States—and it is their Capitol; they have certain rights here it seems to me—these delegations I think ought to be admitted here upon the card of the Clerk or Sergeant at Arms or some other official, without being obliged to look up some member to issue a card. It seems to me that the arrangement now proposed will cause a good deal of vexation and annoyance.

Mr. DALZELL. Of course there will be some annoyance to members in issuing these cards, just as there is annoyance now sometimes in being called upon to give cards of admission to the gallery. But the annoyance will be far more than offset by the advantages which will result. Of course, this is "the people's Capitol," but it is appropriated to certain purposes, and members of the House are entitled to all that contributes to their comfort and their health.

Mr. SIMS. I admit that; but it seems to me that when delegations come here from a long distance and at great expense they should not be subjected to great inconvenience in getting upon

Mr. DALZELL. I have already answered that suggestion by saying that there will be no trouble in getting cards from members. There will always be members about who will honor a request of that kind.

I understand that the day before yesterday the new edition of the Congressional Directory was distributed in this House by being placed on the desks of members, and I have heard from four or five different members that when they came in their Directories had disappeared. I understand from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that his copy had gone.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir,
Mr. BELL. And mine.
Mr. DALZELL. These books had been taken by persons who had no business upon the floor at all.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does this report come from the Committee on Rules, and has it been unanimously adopted by that committee?

Mr. DALZELL. Unanimously.
Mr. CLAYTON. Then I think we are ready to vote upon the question, unless the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARD-question, unless the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Richardson] wishes to say something.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no desire to occupy the time of the House. I think this proposed rule ought to be agreed to in the interest of convenience and good order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules.

The question having been taken—
The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. SIMS. I call for a division.

The question being again taken there were—ayes 103 noce 23.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 103, noes 23.

So the resolution was agreed to. On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. Sherman in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9315) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. I see that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

LIVINGSTON] is now in his seat. I should be glad to know whether we can now agree upon a time for closing general debate.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. So far as I know, we can agree at any time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There are three gentlemen on our side who have expressed a desire to occupy twenty minutes each—the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ZENOR], and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] Mr. LIVINGSTON. If there is no one else desiring to occupy

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I believe those are all on this side.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then I am ready to agree to a proposition which will allow an hour's debate on this side.

Mr. CANNON. Then I suggest that we allow one hour more on each side of the House, so that the debate will close at twenty minutes after 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the general debate upon this deficiency bill shall close at the time he has indicated?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of any specific agreement, the Chair supposes that the control of the time on each side will be within his jurisdiction.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield twenty minutes of the time on this side of the House to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose when this bill is read for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule, if it shall then be in order, to offer an amendment and to give no tice of the amendment at the present time, and I send to the desk and ask to have read the amendment which I shall propose.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be read in the time of the gentleman.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17, end of line 13, add:

"The Government of the United States hereby declares its policy and purpose is to relinquish the sovereignty of the islands of the Philippine Archipelago, acquired under the terms of the treaty of Paris, and to restore the sovereignty thereof to the people of said islands so soon as they shall make manifest their fitness and capacity for self-government."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the charge has often been made that the Democratic party had failed to outline any definite and specific policy with reference to the treatment of the Philippine Íslands. I shall offer this amendment, in which I believe is embodied a clear, specific, and emphatic outline or definition of policy, and if the amendment shall be adopted it will give assurance to the people of those islands which will result in the speedy restoration of peace and order in the islands and relieve the United States of many serious embarrassments which now exist.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that this question has been debated very extensively, and it is not my purpose to enter at length, or into any detail, within the limited time allotted to me in the discussion, of all the phases surrounding the question. I wish, however, to offer a few suggestions in support of the policy outlined in the proposed amendment.

I shall call attention first to the suggestion that the past struggles of the people of the Philippine Islands for civil and political liberty and freedom indicate that these people have an adequate conception and comprehension of the value of political and civil liberty secured under an independent local self-government.

For more than three hundred years the people of these islands I am persuaded that any people who are so persistent to maintain a struggle throughout the centuries to secure for themselves the right and the privilege of local self-government, and authority to make their own laws and to execute their own laws, have a proper conception of the value of liberty and of the value of an independent government.

Another suggestion to which I desire to invite the consideration of the House is this: The peace, quiet, and good order which prevailed in the Philippine Islands after the fall of Manila and until the publication of the proclamation of the President of the United States asserting sovereignty over the islands not only attest the right conception of civil and political liberty and the value thereof by these people, but is a demonstration of their purpose and intention to maintain an orderly government adequate to their

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are all aware of the conditions prevail-ing in those islands at the time of our first occupation of them. As one of the incidents of the Spanish war, a war inaugurated, as the people of the United States and this Government proclaimed, in behalf of the rights of man and for the welfare of a downtrodden and oppressed people, found cordial expression of approval on the part of the people of the United States regardless of section or territory.

But, as I said, an incident of that war caused a portion of the American Navy in the Bay of Manila to destroy a portion of the Spanish fleet; and when our armies found it proper and necessary to occupy the land of the Philippines they found there a people struggling for self-government, striving for the attainment of their liberties, and seeking to secure relief from a foreign sovereignty.

I do not deem it necessary to assert that there was a specific oral declaration of alliance between the Filipinos and the American armies, nor do I conceive it necessary to assert that there was a written agreement to that effect; but it is well known that the armies of the Filipinos stood side by side with the armies of the United States, and that there was a mutual cooperation between these two armies in a cause which they believed was a battle in behalf of the rights of man and the maintenance and establishment of civil and political liberty under local self-government.

Mr. Chairman, another consideration that I offer in support of this policy is the declaration that local self-government was the inspiration of the fathers of the Revolution and is the genius of our civil institutions. In 1776 our fathers found themselves encompassed with conditions very similar to and very suggestive of the conditions existing in the Philippine Islands. They were not content to submit to these conditions or longer to bear the deprivation of their rights and their liberties, so they inaugurated the revolution against the Government of Great Britain for the purpose of establishing their independence; and it was the love of liberty, the love of freedom, and the hope of local self-government which made Patrick Henry more eloquent than Demosthenes, John Adams more forceful than Cicero, Washington more coura-geous than Hannibal, and the rank and file of the patriots braver than the Spartans of old. Such was the spirit and the genius of the people who struggled to establish local self-government and secure personal and political and civil liberty in 1776.

But, Mr. Chairman, in those days the charge was brought against the patriots of the Revolution that the people of the colorism is a secure personal and political and civil liberty in 1776.

nies were incapable of and unfit for independence and its obligations and responsibilities, and this charge was brought and urged by the English Government and by its sympathizers. To-day we find the same criticisms offered, the same objections made to establishing a free government in the Philippine Islands. I wish to call attention to the fact and to the proof that our experiences and success in government have demonstrated that an opportunity for self-government should be afforded to people who have the intelligence and patriotism to maintain a persistent struggle for its acquirement.

I am aware that we are criticised by the Administration for the position that we take. I am further aware, as I said a moment ago, that the suggestion is put forth that these people are incapable of self-government. But I wish to call attention to the fact that an opportunity has not been offered to them to demonstrate their fitness, and I wish to emphasize the fact that a people who love liberty and who persistently seek to secure liberty and selfnoerty and who persistently seek to secure liberty and selfgovernment are entitled to an opportunity to demonstrate their fitness and their capacity for these blessings.

Another suggestion is that a long-distance government is not promotive of personal, civil, or political liberty, and is a hazardous experiment for a popular government to undertake. For the truth of this assertion I appeal to the facts of history. It is unnecessary that I should call the attention of this body to the experience of the Roman Government, or the indictment contained in the Declaration of Independence against the Government at London. By a long-distance government I mean a government where the seat of power and authority is far removed from the people governed, where the authority of government is denied to the people governed and is vested in some central authority far removed from them. I am persuaded that if the people of the United States shall undertake to maintain a government in the Philippine Islands, that government will be unsatisfactory to the people of the islands, and will be a hazardous experiment to the people of the United States.

The next thought to which I desire to call the attention of the House is that there are no geographical, political, or commercial necessities or reasons which impel the perpetual holding of these islands. When we consider them geographically, they are on the opposite side of the earth to us. There is no consideration of relationship that impels or persuades us that they are important or essential to us as a part of our territory. When we consider them politically, the argument is still stronger. They are a people who in their spirit, in their genius, and in their purpose are as different and distinct from the people of the United States as day is differ-

They have no thoughts or purposes in common with us, save the thought and purpose of securing for themselves their liberty and the right to govern themselves and to execute their govern-mental functions according to their own ideals and their own necessities. When we consider these islands from a commercial standpoint, it occurs to me that it has been demonstrated time and time again upon the floor of this House and in other ways and places that it is a losing experiment financially to the people of the United States.

I need not detain the House to call attention to the many million dollars that have been expended in an effort to retain our estab-lishment there, the many millions of dollars that are expended in the support of the army, and in the attempt to maintain a civil establishment. But I believe I am justified in asserting that in the matter of expense and drainage of the General Treasury of the United States we are merely entering now into a conception of the magnitude of this proposition in the future.

Another thought to which I desire to call the attention of this body is this. Appropriations from the Treasury of the United States to maintain an official establishment in dependent colonies, not intended for incorporation as an integral portion of the United States is not consonant with the principles of American Government. As I said before, there being no necessity or can Government. As I said before, there being no necessity or reason for their identification with us as a part of our territory or of our Government, I may add that our Government has alor of our Government, I may and that our Government has arready declared by resolution in the Senate its fixed and determined policy that the Philippine Islands shall never be incorporated into the United States as an integral portion of our territory. If they are not to be so incorporated they must be denied statehood; then they must of necessity, so long as they remain under sovereignty of the United States, be held as colonies and their people occupy the position of vassals.

I am persuaded, Mr. Chairman, that there will be not only dissatisfaction with such a policy and such a government in the islands of the Philippines which will breed perpetual trouble, but there will be dissatisfaction among the people of the United States at this continued expenditure and appropriation of money from the

at this continued expenditure and appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, for the relief of some I will say that it is not my purpose to further discuss the question in reference to the Philippine Islands at this time, because I am almost permaded that the further we discuss the permaded that the further was discussed to the permaded that the further was discussed to the permaded that the further was discussed to the permanent with the further was discussed to the permanent was the permanent with the further was discussed to the permanent was the permanent with the permanent was also as the permanent was also as the permanent was a permanent with the permanent was a permanent was a permanent with the permanent was a p suaded that the further we discuss the nearer we get into the condition of a good old friend of mine who said that he had been trying for a long time to find out who these people were, where they came from, and where they were going, and the more investigation he made and the further he went the more confused he became and further away from a solution he was. He said it reminded him somewhat of an occurrence which took place in his community once upon a time in the past, when an honored old gentleman who had been elected to the legislature and served his term and returned home to the bosom of his constituents, and by reason of the superior to the bosom of his constituents, and by reason of the superior advantages thus obtained impressed the people with the idea that he was the happy possessor of a great deal of knowledge and information, and one of his neighbors received a letter from a friend who had a few years before removed to a distant Western State and was writing about the conditions out there, and he wrote to his friend, "We have been having a pretty hard time out here up to a short time ago, but lately times are improving. A great many 'immigrants' have removed into the country and they have been buying up our corn, and that has raised the price, which has brought a degree of prosperity to us."

Now, the man who received the letter did not know what an "immigrant" was, and so he went over to his old friend and showed him the letter and asked him to read it, and to then explain to him what was meant by an "immigrant." He adjusted his processed as the letter and a second read the letter with much district. his spectacles on his nose and read the letter with much dignity, and when he came to the word "immigrant" the man seeking information said, "That is what I want you to explain." The old man studied a moment, put on a serious look, and with much unction delivered himself as follows: "Well, I have read a great many books, and really have made a special study of this question for a long time, but I have not arrived at any definite conclusion as to what an 'immigrant' is; but from the best information I have, my best judgment is he is a sorter of a mongrel, a kind of a cross between a 'possum and a coon, and while I can not tell you definitely as to what he is, I am sure of one thing, and that is he is thunder on corn." [Loud laughter.] Thus, it seems to me, is our situation as to the Filipinos.

I do not know what race of people they are, and I have not been able to find out, and there is a very great difference of opinion among the gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber who have taken the time and gone to the expense of visiting these far-away islands to find out something about them. The people in the Philippines seem to be composed of Chinese, Japanese, Malays, Indians, negroes, and all sorts and kinds of mongrel Asiatic peoples, and I have about come to the conclusion that it is very hard to determine who and what they are, from whence they came, or whither they are going, and about the only thing that is a certainty about them is that they are "thunder on the United States Treasury" and a very extravagant luxury on the body politic, and therefore I agree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat and who has just discussed the Philippines, that the sooner we get rid of them the better it will be for us, for it will considerably lighten the burdens upon our own people and may possibly make the Filipinos happy; and hence I favor have taken the time and gone to the expense of visiting these and may possibly make the Filipinos happy; and hence I favor reserving whatever of coaling and naval stations we need to remunerate us to some extent for the money we have expended, and turn the islands over to them, and let them pay their own expenses and run their own affairs. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose, as I said in the outset, to discuss the Filipinos. I prefer to come closer home and discuss a question which more directly involves our own people, especially the people of the district I have the honor to represent. I was glad that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, my friend Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, called attention to the item in this bill of $220,000 for the extension of the rural free-delivery service. I paid strict attention immediately, because that item interested me, because it interests my people, and I desired to find out, if possible, from him what was the cause of the seeming delay in some parts of the country in the establishment of this service.

I asked him the question myself what the difficulty was, and he explained that this service had grown so rapidly that the appropriation of $3,500,000 made for the extension of the service had been exhausted, or was not now available, and it was necessary to have this appropriation of $220,000 to be available at once in order that the service might be extended to those now asking for it. Therefore I am glad to find it in this bill, because I believe there is no service that has been given to the American people for many decades, yea, for many and many years past, that is calculated to do more good for the people at large, calculated to bring so many blessings to the people who need them and who will appreciate and use them, than this rural free delivery of the mails which our Government has inaugurated.

It is intended to give conveniences and benefits to the people who do not have the advantages that others have who live near the great commercial centers. In 1863 free delivery was given to the people residing in the cities, and it has been continued from then until now, and the people who live in these populous communities only had to go a few steps to the post-office, where they could obtain their mails; and this Government years ago gave them the benefit of free delivery at their offices and stores and places of business and at their homes. I am glad that the Government has determined to take a step farther and give it to the people throughout the length and breadth of this great nation of ours. No better service could be rendered the masses of the peo-ours. No better service could be rendered the masses of the people, and I hope the wonderful strides this system has already made may continue until every part of the territory which can be occupied by it will be reached.

President McKinley stated in his last message to Congress "that it was the most striking new development in the continued rapid growth of the postal service," and he spoke with the truthfulness of a prophet of old. It was originated by a bill that passed the Congress in 1893 during a Democratic Administration. The first of a prophet of old. It was originated by a bill that passed the Congress in 1893, during a Democratic Administration. The first service under it was put into effect by William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, a Democratic Postmaster-General, and the experiments he made demonstrated its usefulness and practicability, and so it was started on its career. Its development since that time has been wonderful. Its origin may be epitomized somewhat as follows: The law authorizing the service passed in 1893. In 1894 there was an appropriation of $10,000 in order that experiments could be made, and see whether or not it was practical

In 1895 a similar appropriation was made. In 1896 $10,000 more was appropriated. These appropriations being considered insufficient by the Postmaster-General were not expended, but for the fiscal year 1897 there was an appropriation of $40,000 made by Congress, and under this appropriation the first experiments were made. In 1898 $50,000 was appropriated, and in 1899 $150.000, and in 1900 $450,000. In 1901 there was appropriated $1,750,000, and for the last fiscal year the appropriation amounted to $3,500,000. Every State in this Union, with the exception of Montana, a mountainous State, with few rural settlements, is represented in the free rural-delivery service at this time, and every Territory enjoys this blessing except New Mexico, where two applications for free delivery are now under investigation, and Hawaii, too new a Territory to be considered in this connec-Hawaii, too new a Territory to be considered in this connec-

In our far away northern Alaska, within a short distance of the arctic circle, an exceptional good rural-delivery service was operated during the past summer for the accommodation of thousands of miners who congregate at that point.

I am glad it is thus spreading throughout this country. I regret, however, that in my own State of Mississippi there are to-day but two routes in operation and only 34 applications from that State and a sensideration and only 34 applications from that State under consideration and now on file in the Post-Office Department. But it affords me pleasure to know that 17 out of those 34 applications now on file and under consideration came from my district, and I do hope and trust that they may be granted soon and the routes petitioned for by those noble and deserving people be put into operation, and I shall certainly do all I can to bring about that felicitous and beneficial result. Hence I am interested in trying to push the service along as rapidly as possible in order that these routes now under consideration may be granted as speedily as it is possible to grant them.

Now, I want to call attention to the further development of this service, as shown by the following statistics:

During the year the special agents completed 3,037 routes, so that on July 1, 1901, including service established on that date, 4,301 routes were in operation. The work of the current year will provide for as many more routes, bringing the total up to 8,600 on July 1, 1902. On December 2, 1901, 6,009 will be in existence.

The number of pieces of mail of all kinds handled during the year was 151,259,160; 175,744 money orders were issued on applications received by rural carriers, and 49,839 letters registered en route.

Four thousand three hundred and one carriers traveled daily an aggregate of 100,259 miles of road, or an average of 23.32 miles per carrier. The total area covered by these routes includes 116,960 square miles, or an average of 27.2 square miles per route. This equals the land area of the New England States, New York, and New Jersey combined.

From this will be seen the wonderful development of this great Indeed, it has been extended until now whole counties service. Indeed, it has been extended until now whole counties are included where the carrier goes to every home—to every door, practically speaking—of every inhabitant within the limits of the county. The counties of which this is true are Anderson, S. C.; Carroll, Mo.; Delaware, Ind.; Fairfield, Conn.; Frederick, Md.; Hardin, Iowa; Jefferson, Ala.; Niagara, N. Y.; Washington, Pa., and Washington, Tenn.; and I am glad to say that in the two counties of the South that have received this service there is promise of the very best results. It is no longer a problematical question whether it is practicable or beneficial that this service should be thus extended. It is estimated that it will eventually cover a million square miles and will deliver the mails to 21,000,000 people living in the country.

How is this service obtained and how is it conducted? It is granted only upon a petition signed by the people themselves, who desire the service. A member of Congress can not have it established upon his personal application, but the people must sign a petition and then send it to him to be presented to the postal authorities. The Department prescribes the form of this petition and will furnish copies on application. The carriers are now appointed under the civil-service rules by competitive examination. The member of Congress can no longer control or influence the appointment of a carrier. The most desirable route should be 25 miles in length. The Government requires the carrier to observe on his route a fixed and definite schedule, and to have a certain hour to leave the post-office from which distribution is made, and a definite time when he will reach particular points along the route as he delivers the mail. Hence the people can soon learn with reasonable certainty the time when he will pass any given point; and they can meet him for the purpose of buying postage stamps, registering letters, or placing in his custody money with which to purchase money orders—for which he is required to give a prescribed receipt; and they can intrust to him the letters in which the money orders are to be placed, so they may be mailed at the nearest post-office, and it is his duty to take the letters, purchase the money order, inclose it in the letter, and mail it.

The carrier is virtually a traveling postmaster; the boxes along the road which he travels are practically the post-offices. Hence this arrangement will put the post-office, in one sense of the word, at the door of every citizen. He will have a postmaster every day at his door to supply him with the postal facilities which the Government provides. Another service which is proposed by the Department is that while the carrier goes through the country along his route he shall display a flag which will give the people information as to the reports of the Weather Bureau. It is very important to the farmer when he is cutting down a lot of hay or forage crops, and in fact when harvesting any and all of his crops, to know, if possible, the probabilities of the weather for the next few days. Sometimes such information would be worth to the farmer hundreds, yea, thousands of dollars. This service is proposed to be made an adjunct of the rural free-delivery system. Such a plan in operation to-day with the present service would enable the Department to deliver the weather reports to 600,000 farmers, which would be of incalculable benefit to them, and cost nothing additional nothing additional.

Some people, in the consideration of this service, get nervous for fear it will cost too much, or that the expenses—

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think that $500 a year is sufficient pay for one of these carriers in order to get efficient service?

Mr. CANDLER. I doubt seriously whether it is entirely adequate compensation for the services of the carrier and his equipment, in view of the fact that the carrier is compelled to provide at his own expense his own vehicle and horses and all the equipment with which to perform the service.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Mr. CLARK. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] know that if all these carriers were to die to-day, you could replace them ten times over to-morrow at the same salary?

Mr. SIMS. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. CLARK. Answer mine.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the gentleman know that the carriers in our cities, who travel on foot and are not subjected to the expense of specific graphicles and horses precise salaries of $700 expense.

of providing vehicles and horses, receive salaries of $700 or $800 a

Mr. CLARK. I know that for every man carrying the mail in connection with this free-delivery service there are ten ready to connection with this free-delivery service there are ten ready to take his place if they get the chance.

Mr. CANDLER. As I was saying, some people get very nervous in reference to the cost of this service. So long as we can obtain carriers who will perform this service efficiently at the salary now paid by the Government, I shall be content to have them receive that amount; and I will say candidly that, so far as my information goes, there are, in my district at least, plenty of people who are anxious to accept employment in this service at people who are anxious to accept employment in this service at the present salary; and if the Government will give us this serv-I will guarantee to furnish the carriers.

But I was about to discuss the question of the expense of this service. The cost of maintaining a route, including the salary of $18.50 per square mile. On the 1st day of July, 1901, the force of 4,301 rural carriers were serving a population of 2,840,644 people at a cost of a fraction over 75 cents for each person so served, and now there are being served about 4,000,000 people at about the same amount per capita of cost. At this rate, Mr. Chairman, it would cost about $18,500,000 to serve the 21,000,000 people on the 1,000,000 square miles to be included in this branch of the public service.

There are some people in this country who think that the expense of this service would necessarily increase taxation. Let us see, then, in this connection, what the effect of this service would be on the postal revenues. As a matter of fact, a gentleman in my district said to me once when I was discussing this question that he was in doubt about the propriety of this service, because that he was in doubt about the propriety of this service, because he believed that it would necessarily raise the taxes. I made the proposition then and there that if it took a solitary additional cent from his pocket or raised his taxes a copper he could keep an account of it and draw upon me at sight for the amount so expended, and that while I did not have any very considerable amount of funds in the bank, yet I felt quite sure that the bank would take care of the draft and I would pay it. I told him that I would rick paying something out of my away receiver if processory. would take care of the draft and I would pay it. I told him that I would risk paying something out of my own pocket, if necessary, so that the people might have the great benefit of this service, but I am sure my friend will never call upon me, for his taxes will not be raised because of any expense of this service.

Now, I want to call your attention to another matter. Let us look at this question from another standpoint. On an average there are about 125 families on a route. Under the old system they travaled from 3 to 10 miles in going to the post-office. If there are about 125 families on a route. Under the old system they traveled from 2 to 10 miles in going to the post-office. If the cost in time and other factors be reckoned at 10 cents a day for each family, and that is clearly a moderate estimate, that would make an aggregate of $12.50 a day for the families on the route. The Government can deliver the mail at the doors of all these people for $2 a day. Why should it not do so and save them this large burden? Extend the calculation to the entire country, and what is the result? There are about 4,000,000 families dependent upon the rural service. The aggregate cost to them of going to the post-office reaches an enormous sum annually going to the post-office reaches an enormous sum annually.

The Government can carry the post-office to them and to their doors for a small fraction of the amount. Under such circumstances their claim to the service becomes irresistible. It is the business of the Government to deliver the mails to the people as far as may be practicable. It has delivered the mails during all these years in the cities, and the country people have all this time helped to pay the expenses of this free-delivery service, while they received no benefit themselves from it, and row I plead for them that they may be allowed the same service. The plead for them that they may be allowed the same service. free-delivery service in the 866 cities in the United States having it cost about $20,000,000, and if this amount of money is expended in the service of 866 cities it would be only common justice to the farmers in this nation who live on the 1,000,000 square miles of rural territory to extend to them the same service, and especially so when I have shown it can be done for $18,500,000. I am earnestly in favor of giving it to them, because they deserve it and ought to have it. [Applause.]

ble old fellow he is—who lives about 10 miles from Corinth, on the Iuka road, and I suppose Uncle Bill comes to town after his mail about once a week; and if so, he travels 20 miles every trip each week, or 1,040 miles each year, and in the last twenty-five years, at that rate, he has traveled 26,000 miles, or more than the distance around the world, in order to get his mail. I favor sending Uncle Bill's mail to him and the mail of all his neighbors to them by means of this system. They are patriotic, noble, generous people; in fact, all the people I represent are, and I want them to have every good thing possible to be obtained for them, and you need not doubt my watching their interests.

Now, in view of the fact that some people fear it will be too expensive, let us investigate its effect on the postal revenues. Everywhere it has been inaugurated the revenues have rapidly and permanently increased. In Carroll County, Md., where they have a service covering the entire county, the increase of the revenues to the postal service has been a fraction over 10 per cent. In Washington County, Tenn., where they have also a whole county service, the increase has been about 7.4 per cent. A comparison between 35 post-offices with rural delivery and 35 post-offices without rural delivery, with about equal population, for a period of three years showed an increase of revenue of 11 per cent for those with rural delivery and only 4 per cent for those without those with rural delivery and only 4 per cent for those without rural delivery. Frederick County, Md., which joins Carroll County, Md., above referred to, has had no rural delivery until recently, and its increase in revenue was only 1.33 per cent as against 10 per cent in Carroll County. An analysis of the gross postal revenues of the United States for 1901, which was $11,631,-102.20 and the metal $2.45 county. 193.39, shows that $74.295,394.47 came from the 866 free-delivery cities, the remaining 3,600 Presidential offices yielded $16,063,-251.81, while the 72,479 fourth-class offices produced $18,913,519.21. These amounts show an increase over the preceding year as

Free-delivery offices increased 11.11
Presidential offices increased 3.56
Fourth-class offices increased 2.19

In strictly rural communities (except where rural free delivery is established) the postal service is deficient, and the patrons for whom it is provided are too remote from the post-offices to take advantage of the meager facilities except when some urgent necessity compels them to do so; hence the comparatively low rate of increase in fourth-class offices. It is safe to say that in rural communities it does not exceed 2 per cent annually. Frederick County, Md., demonstrates by actual figures that it is but 1.33 per cent.

These unsatisfactory conditions disappear as rural free delivery, with its attending benefits, reaches out into the country, giving the people equal postal facilities without regard to locality, which has the effect of increasing the revenues at a rate at least equal to that maintained in the free-delivery cities, where during the past five years it has averaged 8 per cent. It may then be reasonably claimed that a general extension of rural free delivery will increase the postal revenues from year to year at such a rate that the service will be self-sustaining. This is no more than was claimed by the friends of free city delivery in 1863, when the introduction of that service in our large cities was opposed by those who saw in it a senseless expenditure which would entail upon the future revenues of the service a burden which it was feared they could not bear; but instead of being a burden upon the revenues it has proven a good and paying investment, and rural free delivery will pay its own way, and in a few years, perhaps, a

Now, let us go further and see about the increase in mail handled. I invite your close attention to the following statistics: Every establishment of service is promptly followed by a phenomenal increase from month to month in the number of pieces of mail delivered and collected by the carrier, and it is remarkable that the increase does not cease after the first few months, but continues with regularity and without any appreciable decrease

This may be clearly shown by the statement made up from the records of 24 of the post-offices at which rural free delivery was originally established in 1896. The statement includes the years 1900 and 1901. In 1900 the carriers at those offices delivered 1,607,972 pieces of all classes of mail and collected 250,719 pieces. In 1901 the same carriers delivered 1,934,237 pieces and collected 305,578 pieces, showing in the number delivered an increase of 326,265 pieces, or 20.16 per cent, and in the number collected an increase of 54,859 pieces, or 27½ per cent.

It must be borne in mind that this remarkable showing is made by offices where the service has been in operation for four or five years, so that the increase for the year 1901 does not represent a "spurt" such as follows the introduction of the service. The next statement is made up from the records of the Carroll County service, and is for corresponding periods of six months each in the years 1900 and 1901. During the first period the number of pieces delivered reached 780,315 and the pieces collected 218,240, while in the second period the deliveries increased to 1,173,425 and the collections to 308,006. This shows an increase of 393,110 in the number of pieces delivered, or 50.33 per cent, and 89,766 in the number of pieces collected, or 41 per cent. This wonderful record is due to the county system, in operation there for the past eighteen months, which permits of the development of an ideal rural service freely patronized by the people.

Another statement is made up from the records of 50 rural free-delivery offices at which no additional services have been estab-lished during the years 1900 and 1901. The summary shows that in 1900 the deliveries aggregated 3,110,640 pieces and the collec-tions 471,495. In 1901 the same offices delivered 4,033,501 and collected 603,244 pieces. The increase in the number of pieces of mail delivered was 922,861, or 293 per cent, and of mail collected

At many points the increase is almost beyond belief. At many points the increase is almost beyond belief. A state-ment has just been made by the post-office at Owosso, Mich., to the effect that during the month of October just past carriers 1 and 2 delivered 28,560 and collected 1,772 pieces of mail. The same carriers during the corresponding month last year delivered 10,392 pieces and collected 1,131 pieces—an increase of 175 per cent in the number of pieces delivered and 56 per cent in the number collected.

An important feature disclosed by the foregoing statements is the comparatively large increase in the number of pieces of mail collected from rural routes. This means much more than the larger percentage of increase of mail delivered. The latter includes large numbers of newspapers and periodicals which are mailed at the rate of 1 cent a pound, and on which, it has been repeatedly shown, the service reaps no financial gain. But the collections from rural routes are made up almost entirely of letters and postal cards, first-class matter, from which the postal service derives the bulk of its revenues. The farmer seldom mails a newspaper; and when he does pays postage on it at the rate of 4 cents per pound; he never has occasion to send circulars. His mail usually bears the 2-cent stamp.

Rural free delivery stimulates letter writing. The letter box erected along the rural route is a standing invitation to the farmer to write letters. He would not hesitate to write, because he knows the letter will be called for at the farm gate and its answer eventually delivered to him at the same spot.

The comparative statements above will suffice, I think, to satisfy the most skeptical that the people are quick to make use of the facilities brought to them through the medium of rural free delivery, and that their appreciation and gratitude for the service are abundantly shown by the liberal manner in which they patronize the service wherever it is in existence.

This increase in mail matter means a corresponding increase in revenues. But suppose, for argument's sake, the expenses did exrevenues. But suppose, for argument's sake, the expenses did exceed to some small extent the revenues. The Post-Office Department is not conducted to make money. That is not its purpose or object, but, on the contrary, it is a great public vehicle which belongs to the people, and is, and should be, run in the interest of and for the convenience of the people; and if it did not quite pay its own way, appropriations could be, and ought to be, made from the general fund in the Treasury to supply any deficiency. A great Government like this, the richest nation on the globe, can afford to be kind and liberal to its owners the people and can afford to be kind and liberal to its owners, the people, and especially when those people are the representatives of the paramount interest in this country, to wit, agriculture.

Mr. Webster, in his agricultural address at Boston upon his return from England, said:

No man in England is so high as to be independent of this great interest, no man so low as not to be affected by its prosperity or decline.

The same is true, emphatically true, with us; agriculture feeds, to a great extent it clothes us; without it we would not have manufactories, we would not have commerce; they all stand together like pillars in a cluster, largest in the center, and that largest agriculture.

Alexander Hyde, who has contributed so much to agricultural literature and knowledge, said of it:

Iterature and knowledge, said of it:

The adaptation of agriculture to all ranks and conditions of society is not less wonderful. The king himself without any loss of dignity can be a farmer. Most of the Presidents of the United States have retired from their high positions to the cultivation of their broad acres.  of Washington as a farmer we are almost as proud as of Washington the President. Adams on his farm at Quincy, Jefferson at Monticello, Jackson at the Hermitage were just as dignitled as when in the Presidential chair. Van Buren prided himself as much upon his large patch of cabbages at Kinderhook as upon his sharp diplomacy at Washington; Clay surrounded by his shorthorns at Ashland, as when gazed upon with delight by his compeers in the Senate Chamber. The massive intellect of Webster was as conspicuous in the guidance of his farm at Marshfield as when he guided the affairs of state.

Prince and peasant alike feel that in cultivating the soil they are fulfilling he mission which the Creator gave to man when he placed him in the Garden f Eden.

This system is designed and intended especially to stimulate and benefit the agriculturist—the farmer. God in heaven knows he gets less direct help from the Government than any class of our citizenship, and I, for one, will, in this House and out of it, be found battling for what I believe will help him. I am for this service, therefore, because it will bring agricultural life into far closer relations with the active business world; it will keep the farmer in daily communication with the market prices of the products he raises; it will advance general intelligence through products he raises; it will advance general intelligence through the increased circulation of journals, papers, and periodicals; stimulate correspondence, promote good roads, enhance prices of farming lands, make farm life less isolated and more attractive, and unite with other influences to check the drift from country to town or city.

These beneficent advantages would be of incalculable value to our whole country. In the interest of the farmer and for the welfare of every interest, I plead that this service be encouraged by liberal appropriations, because what helps the farming interest builds up every other interest in this broad land. Their prosperity underlies the prosperity of all the people, and should have the earnest concern and careful consideration of every member of this House, and I appeal to both sides in this Chamber to foster this system for the common good of all our people.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to engage in any general discussion of the features of the bill now pending before the House. I have listened with great interest to the discussion of the various subjects which have presented themselves, by the several members of the House under the privilege of the general debate on the present deficiency appropriation bill. What I shall have to say will largely be with reference to our policy toward the Philippine Islands. There is, however, one provision of the bill on page 17 to which I desire to call the attention of the committee, and with regard to which I desire to make a few suggestions, as this has a direct reference to the subject to which I have referred. I find in the bill reported by the committee, on page 17, the following provision:

MILITARY POST.

For the establishment in the vicinity of Manila, P. I., of a military post, including the construction of barracks, quarters for officers, hospital, store-houses, and other buildings, as well as water supply, lighting, sewerage, and drainage, necessary for the accommodation of a garrison of two full regiments of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and two batteries of artillery, to be available until expended, $500,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the policy which is sought to be established in these islands by the appropriation of this large sum of money to establish a permanent military post in these far away islands of the sea. From the district that I have the honor to represent, an application has been presented to the War Department by the citizens of Louisville, New Albany, and Jeffersonville for the establishment of one of these military posts at the Okio falls. the Ohio falls—one of the posts that is proposed to be established by the Department in the near future. I think it has been demonstrated, in connection with this application, even to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, that the site proposed for the establishment of this post is equal, if not superior, in all respects to any site that can be afforded by any other State or any other locality in the Union.

It seems to me that the posts which are to be established for the benefit of our Army, for the accommodation of our cavalry, benent of our Army, for the accommodation of our cavalry, infantry, and artillery within our own borders, should be distributed throughout the country, and should be first established in our own country; and I trust that this proposition will commend itself to the members of this House rather than go away off to the Philippine Islands and spend a large amount of the money of the people of the United States for the establishment of a permanent military post in those islands. It is claimed by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the sum of money mentioned in this provision of the bill is necessary to suitably house, shelter, and provide for our army and soldiers now occupying the Philippine Islands, although it seems somewhat excessive. While I would cheerfully support any reasonable provision to sustain and support our soldiers in the heat negities. the best possible manner while they are compelled to remain in the Philippine Islands, and are there by the authority of our Government, I am, nevertheless, opposed to this provision as it now stands. As I have said, I am opposed to the whole Philippine policy as now pursued by the present Administration.

And I regard this provision of the bill as an effort upon the part of the party in power to initiate a system of permanent improvements in those islands with a view to commit our country to the very policy to which I am so much opposed, rather than to afford our soldiers there the temporary relief to which they are entitled, and of which the chairman of the committee says they so much stand in need. If our soldiers are wanting in suitable and proper shelter for their accommodation in these islands, there can scarcely be any doubt that proper and suitable buildings could be temporarily leased in the city of Manila or elsewhere adequate for all practical purposes at a much less sum of money, or temporary quarters erected at a mere nominal sum. Instead, however, it is here proposed to establish in the vicinity of Manila a proposed to establish in the vicinity of Manila a proposed to the stablish in the vicinity of Manila a proposed to establish in the vicinity of Manila a proposed to the stablish in the vicinity of Manila a proposed to the stablish in the vicinity of Manila and the vicinity of Manila an permanent military post and erect permanent barracks, quarters, hospital, storehouses, and other buildings at a cost of $500,000 to our Government. I am opposed to this. If the distinguished chairman of the committee is in good faith; if he really desires to secure some immediate and urgent relief of this kind for our soldiers in the Phillipines; if the welfare of our soldiers is the chief object of his solicitude and not the establishment of the colonial policy of his party over in the Orient, then he can easily accomplish his patriotic purpose by withdrawing this amendment and submitting in lieu of it a proposition clearly setting out the exact purpose contemplated, and if it is such as will afford relief to our soldiers, provide them with needed comforts, and confine his proposition to this purpose alone, then he will have the cordial and cheerful support of every member on this side of the Chamber, for I can assure the gentleman that the Democrats of this House are just as patriotic, just as willing to support our soldiers in the field, as he or his party. I hope therefore, Mr. Chairman, that this proposition will be so modified before it is submitted to a final vote that I at least may be able to vote for it.

But I am opposed to this provision for other and more substantial reasons, Mr. Chairman. And I am now calling attention to the proposition of establishing a permanent post, when temporary provisions of this character are all that are needed. In the first place, the ultimate disposition of those islands has not yet been determined by the party in power or by the Government of the United States. I know that differences of opinion have been ex-United States. I know that differences of opinion have been expressed during the progress of this discussion, different views with regard to what might be the future disposition of those islands, even upon the other side of the Chamber. I am unable to reconcile the consistency of the position assumed upon the other side with the purposes and policy defined in the declaration of war when we inaugurated the struggle with Spain for the liberation of the island of Cuba. In that declaration the policy and purposes of the Government of the United States were clearly defined and set forth. It was stated that we waved the war for no purpose of con-It was stated that we waged the war for no purpose of conquest, but in order to restore peace, pacify the islands, establish the independence of the Cuban people, and to form a stable government, and ultimately to turn over to the Cuban people the government of those islands.

Now, it is contended that as an incident of this struggle and by reason of the fortunes of war the Philippine Islands came to the United States and that we are charged with a moral and a legal obligation to hold and govern them. Mr. Chairman, what is the theory of the Republican party on this subject? Did we acquire those islands by virtue of conquest, by force of our Army and Navy? If we did, I want to ask why it was, when the American commissioners met the Spanish commissioners in the city of Paris commissioners met the Spanish commissioners in the city of Paris to negotiate the treaty of peace, that our Government proposed to pay to the Spanish Government the sum of $20,000,000 for the cession of the Philippine Islands? If we had acquired a right to the Philippine Islands by virtue of conquest, by force of our arms, then I say it is inconsistent for our commissioners to have made a tender to the Spanish Government of the sum of $20,000,000 in order to secure the signatures of the commissioners. in order to secure the signatures of the commissioners representing the Spanish Government to secure title to the Philippine Islands.

I am opposed to the policy of the Republican party with reference to the government of the Philippines. I do not believe that it is in accordance with the genius of our Government, with the spirit of our institutions, with the history of our people in the past. Gentlemen say that the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands are savages, that they are uncivilized, and incapable of self-government. Mr. Chairman, that has been one of the claims that has always been made in all the struggles of the past where a conflict arose between a mother government and her colonies. The stronger power in the contest has always suggested to the weaker that it is incapable of self-government.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I recall that when Vergennes sent Rochambeau with the French army and navy to save the nation at Yorktown, he did not forget to write to the Spanish Government

Yorktown, he did not forget to write to the Spanish Government that the American colonists were incapable of self-government, and at most would continue to be but a feeble body. Yet when we won our independence by achieving that grand victory at the battle of Yorktown, what was the course of the French Government, under the guidance and inspiration of that very man? Her armies and her navies were withdrawn, and the American coloniets were told to solve the problems of self-government for nists were told to solve the problems of self-government for themselves.

Ah, suppose that when we had won our victory at Yorktown and put an end to the seven years' struggle of Washington and his Continentals, that the British Government and the French Government had said to the American colonists, "You are incapable of self-government. You want benevolent assistance. You want the aid of stronger governments, and as a substitute for the freedom that you have won, for the independence that you have acquired, we offer you schoolhouses to educate your children, we offer to establish military posts in the American colonies, we offer you the construction of public roads and internal improvements."

What do you suppose would have been the reply of the patriots of '76 to such a demand as that? Ah, sirs, the old Liberty Bell upon Independence Hall would again have called forth the American colonists to renew the conflict just ended, to fight the seven years' war over again, to acquire their independence and freedom, And the world would have applauded, as the world has since been grateful for that grand achievement.

It is said by Sir George Trevelyan, in one of the most reliable histories of the American Revolution, that just prior to that struggle George III, his ministers, and his army were all agreed that the American colonists, and especially the population of the rebellious "town of Boston," were the worst people upon the face of the earth. Yet, in spite of all this, when the news spread across the waters and reached the ears of the House of Lords, Lord Chatham, the great English statesman, said: "America has resisted, and, my Lords, I rejoice."

If it was not treason in Lord Chatham to rejoice over the fact that the American colonists had rebelled against the unlawful exactions of the British Government, how can you throw into the face of gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber the charge that we are guilty of a want of fidelity to the Constitution; that we are breathing the spirit of revolt against the Government; that we are uttering treason, when we demand for the Filipinos the same rights, the same principles, the same independence, that our forefathers demanded and for which they fought from the northern slopes of Bunker Hill to the southern swamps of Georgia, from the shot that sounded around the world to the glorious field of

How different the course of the French Government toward the American colonies at the close of that immortal conflict to the policy now pursued by the American Republic toward the people of the Philippine Islands. A people who for more than three hundred years had been asserting their right to liberty, their right to freedom, their right to independence, and as an evidence of their ability to appreciate the value of liberty, demonstrated their willingness to embark their lives and fortunes for its successful achievement against a powerful, cruel, and despotic oppressor; a people who had thus persistently wrought and suffered for their liberty; a people who hailed with royal welcome the brave and gallant Dewey and his American naval heroes at Manila Bay; a people who reenforced our arms, abetted our cause, and marshaled their forces in dealing the last final blow to the sovereignty of Spain in that unhappy archipelago, in the hope of realizing their long-cherished dream, are entitled as a matter of national gratitude as well as every consideration of right and justice to their independence.

Ah, my friends, I recollect that it was the proud boast of Maj. Gen. Rufus Saxton that he was the first commander of the first colored regiment that was organized in the late civil war. Right well did that regiment do its duty, and with faithful performance and discharge of its duty, its loyalty to the Government, its patriotism upon the field, it opened the gateway through which entered 178,000 other colored troops. Yet it is said, Mr. Chairman, that when some white officer came to that regiment and exhibited a disposition to govern and control by his arbitrary will, because he was white and because these men were black, a spirit of resistance, a spirit of disobedience, at once manifested itself in the rank and file. Why? Because the man thought he could command the colored regiment because the was white, and assumed a superiority over them because they were black. It was a failure not to recognize that they were men as he was a man.

As soon as the officer in charge discovered this mistake and learned these facts the men were obedient and easy to command. As soon as these colored soldiers under the command of white officers learned the fact that they were to be treated as other men were treated, that they were men indeed and in fact, they could control these men and almost wrap them around their fingers. It is the spirit of treating men as men. And here in the far-off Philippines what is their distinguishing characteristic, what is there in the history of that race, what is there in the conduct of that people, that justifies this Government of ours in denying to them the same rights that we fought for in the Revolutionary war? Did they ever offend us? No. I listened with exceeding great interest to the statement of facts by my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Green], who has recently returned from the Philippine Islands. What does he say of the characteristics of the Philippine people? Many of them are ignorant, no doubt. What else could you expect from a race of people that have been subjected to tyranny and oppression, as they have been, for three hundred years by tyrannical Spain? But there are many of them with bright intellects, many of them with professional acquirements that entitle and enable them to rise to the highest positions in the judiciary there and hold civil offices under the Government.

Ah, my friends, it will not do to say that because the Filipino—his intelligence, his progress, his civilization—is not up to the standard of the Anglo-Saxon race that therefore we should continue to impose upon him an alien government, a foreign government, a government in which the people of the islands have no right to participate—a government that is carried on and conducted by Federal appointees paid out of the Federal Treasury to go there and make, execute, and administer their laws. There is no people under the sun anywhere, I may say, throughout the broad expanse of the world, who would not feel aggrieved and oppressed when they united with us, when they joined our armies and aided and abetted us in conquering Spain—a struggle in which they had been engaged from time to time for four hundred years—when in the hour of their final triumph, when victory crowned their long and patient struggle, their hopes and aspirations were crushed by a denial of their liberties. They knew that the spirit of our institutions was to grant liberty. They knew that the institutions of our Government were founded upon the eternal principles of right and justice, of equality to all men; that wars had been conducted for the vindication of those principles, and they had a right to believe, in the absence of an avowed public policy of subjugation, that we would accord to them ultimately their independence and their freedom.

Mr. Chairman, I do not say that the occupation of those islands by our Army and our Government for the temporary purpose of restoring order and enabling that people to establish a stable form of government is not a fit and proper thing. We should occupy those islands only for the purpose of restoring order, pacifying the people, and to aid and assist them in forming a government of their own. And to this end Congress should at once, by resolution or otherwise, declare the purposes of our Government to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence, and, third, protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the Republics of Central and South America. In proposing protection from outside interference the Democrats offer to the Philippine Republic the same guardianship which has been given to the Republics of Central and South America—a guardianship that gives to the smaller Republics the protection of our strength without making them the victims of our greed. For seventy-five years the Monroe doctrine has been a bulwark to the independent governments which have sprung up to the south of us. It has not involved us in any considerable expense, no complications, but has been immensely valuable to both guardian and ward. A firm and friendly warning from the United States has always sufficed to secure equity and justice and prevent a conflict when made in the name of this great American doctrine. A declaration by our Government against outside interference with the Philippine Republic would doubtless have the desired effect.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I believe the Democratic party can afford to take its stand upon such a platform. I, for one, at least, speaking for myself, am willing to assume the responsibility of now and here declaring my unqualified fealty to such a policy. I am willing to incur and meet all unfriendly criticism that may come to me from my people and from the country that such a course may invite. I believe that we, as Democrats, can safely occupy such grounds as these and challenge the attack of imperialists. Let us see, Mr. Chairman. More than a year has elapsed since the election of 1900, which, according to the Republican prophecy made in that campaign, was to terminate the war in the Philippines. Every prophecy indulged, every promise made, and every argument advanced has proven a dismal failure. On the other hand, every argument then submitted, every evil then predicted concerning the policy of imperialism of the Republican party by the Democratic party have been more than verified by the events which have since transpired. The wisdom of the policy declared in the Democratic platform of 1900 upon the subject of our relations with the Philippine Islands and our newly acquired possessions has been more clearly demonstrated since that time.

When we said that the Republican party had entered upon a new departure, a new policy, not warranted by precedent, not justified by the traditions and history of the Republic. When the Democratic platform charged that imperialism would involve the Republic in unnecessary war, would sacrifice the lives of many of our noblest sons, and place the United States, previously known and applauded throughout the world as the champion of freedom, in the false and un-American position of crushing with military force the efforts of our allies to achieve liberty and self-government, we were charged by Republicans with having been instrumental in encouraging the insurrectos and prolonging the war in the Philippines. We were told by the Republican party in that campaign that but for the encouragement the Filipinos were receiving from Democratic speeches and literature the war would close at once; that as soon as it was known in the Philippine Islands that William J. Bryan was defeated for President the whole trouble in the Philippine Islands would end, and all further resistance to our authority in the archipelago would collapse. Well, Mr. Bryan was unfortunately defeated and the Republican party succeeded to power in every branch of the Government. But still, Mr. Chairman, the war goes on in the Philippines.

Recruiting stations are all still maintained and recruiting officers are kept busy all over the country securing fresh enlistments from the ranks of the young men of our country to replenish and replace the depleted ranks of our army over in the Philippines, occasioned by the continuation of the war that should have closed more than a year ago, according to Republican campaign prophecy. Ah, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts? Has the war closed? No. It is true that the forces of resistance to the United States authority in the islands are not now so formidable as they were; that many of the insurrectos formerly engaged in open revolt against us have surrendered to our military authorities, some of them have abandoned the hostile bands and resumed their civil pursuits, while quite a loss in killed and wounded have been sustained in the numerous engagements that have taken place on the islands during the last year. So the outlook for peace at this time in the archipelago seems more encouraging than at any period since American occupation. But even with this prospect to encourage us the situation for our people presents no flattering inducements to permanently hold and remain in the Philippines. The Admin-istration in power refuses to commit itself to any definite policy. Time and again that side of the Chamber has been challenged to state what would be the future and final policy of the Administration with relation to these islands. The answer has always and invariably been evasive, and no one to-day knows what the intentions and purposes of the Republican party are in reference to this new possession, except as we see them developed and unfolded in the evolution of the scheme of colonial government and imperial rule.

Republicans are not willing to say that they intend to make the Republicans are not willing to say that they intend to make the people of the Philippine Islands citizens, with a voice in the affairs of our Government. This would be, as they well know, to propose the incorporation into our body politic elements of disintegration, producing a heterogeneous Government which would ultimately fall to pieces because of diversity of races and interests. Neither are they frank enough to declare, if this is what they mean, that the Filipinos are to be kept and held as subjects forever, for this, as they well understand, would be plainly violative of and inconsistent with our form of Government, our traditions and the almost universal sentiment of our people. When ditions, and the almost universal sentiment of our people. the country is made to understand that we must put the Filipinos into training for ultimate citizenship or condemn them to perpetual and hopeless servitude under a colonial system; when one un-derstands that we must either hold before the Filipinos the hope of sharing in our Government or doom them to despair; when these alternatives are understood and fully appreciated, one can readily see why the Republican party evade, equivocate, and refuse to divulge their purpose.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic plan for the solution of the Philippine question is the only consistent, natural, and honorable

one. It is identical with the plan proposed by the Republicans for the settlement of the Cuban question, and the Republicans can not reject the Democratic plan without showing some essential difference between the rights of the Cubans and the rights of the Filipinos. First, as already suggested, a stable government must be established in the place of the one overthrown by us, but it will be an easy work to establish this stable government when the Filipinos understand and know that it is to be their government. There would no longer be peace in Cuba; there would be insur-rection and revolt among the Cuban people to-day if we were treating and proposed to treat the Cubans as we are the Filipinos. There would now be peace and order in the Philippines if we had treated them as we have treated the Cubans. We have not been overscrupulous in the observance of our obligations with Cuba; we have not hurried to fulfill our promises, and yet the confidence which the Cubans have felt and yet feel in ultimate independence has induced them to submit even when our demands have seemed

Mr. Chairman, these are the suggestions made by the two parties in relation to the Philippine question. It seems to me that there can and will not be much hesitancy by the American people when they come to consider and calmly reflect upon the situation as it now presents itself between the definite and plain American as it now presents itself between the definite and plain American policy proposed by the Democratic party and the evasive, doubtful, and dangerous policy sought to be engrafted upon American institutions by the Republican party. But aside from this, let me call attention to another suggestion in connection with this subject. At a time when, by reason of exorbitant and unnecessary taxation, supplemented, if you please, by a large balance of trade in our favor we have a large and tempting surplus in the Treasury, we are apt to overlook all questions of costs and expeditures. I want to challenge the attention of the members of penditures. I want to challenge the attention of the members of this House and the country at large to the immense sacrifice in treasure and human life in perpetuating this foreign, this European, this strangely un-American policy, and to draw attention to some comparisons.

For some reasons we are in the Orient, and, as our Republican friends tell us, we are there not so much for our own good as for the good of humanity and the benefit of our Filipino brethren. Let us see wnat we are paying, and are to pay, in life and money to remain there. General Chaffee suggested but a few days since, and it seems conceded that his suggestions are well founded, that it would in all probability require 30,000 soldiers for twenty-five years in the Philippines to overgome and subdue the Filipinos. What does this mean in money? Thirty thousand men in the Philippines means, according to well authenticated statistics, $1,500 a year for every soldier. Thirty thousand soldiers, therefore, means $45,000,000 per annum, and for twenty-five years it means the grand total of $1,125,000,000. This, it must be understood, includes the cost only of subjugation and military control of the islands, yet to be accomplished. Add to this the $20,000,000 paid to the Spanish Government for the cession of these islands, and you have the grand aggregate of $1,145,000,000. It is not an extravagant estimate that up to this time the expenditures have aggregated at least the sum of $300,000,000. Nearly as much money has already been expended in the prosecution of this war, and the larger part of it since the treaty of peace was signed, than was expended in the war of the Revolution, the war of 1812, and the war with Mexico.

The estimated cost of the Revolutionary war is $135,193,705; the

the war with Mexico.

The estimated cost of the Revolutionary war is $135,193,705; the war of 1812, $107,159,103; the war with Mexico, $100,000,000. I say that the cost to the people of our country of the policy of the party in power has nearly equaled the combined cost of the three great wars prior to 1861—and what for? Mr. Chairman, to show the loss of life sustained since this war began up to January 11, 1902—and the greatest death rate has been sustained in the Philippine Islands—I will incorporate as part of my remarks a communication from the War Department: munication from the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, January 11, 1902.

Washington, January 11, 1902.

Hon. Robert W. Miers,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Sir: Replying to your letter of the 10th instant to the Secretary of War, asking for a statement of the number of deaths in the Regular and Volunteer Army of the United States during the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, in Cuba and Porto Rico by reason of wounds or disease, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

	Officers.	Enlisted men.
From May 1, 1898, to June 30, 1899. From June 30, 1899, to July 1, 1800. From July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1901.	224 74 57	6,395 1,930 1,988
Aggregate	855	10,258

I regret that it is entirely impracticable to furnish you the number of soldiers discharged by reason of wounds or disease incurred in the service, because of the fact that no statement giving this data has ever been prepared in this office.

Very respectfully,

GEO. ANDREWS,

GEO. ANDREWS, Assistant Adjutant-General,

These were brave American officers and enlisted men who paid the last full measure of devotion to their country. They followed the flag to the Tropics—to untimely but honored graves as became the flag to the Tropics—to untimely but honored graves as became brave and heroic men—valiant American soldiers. They dared and died under the flag of their country in the discharge of the highest duty of an American citizen. Our country delights to honor the names and memories of her dead heroes, and the names and memories of these, with those of the past, will ever be cherished as a precious and sacred legacy to the nation.

I appreciate and glory in the sentiment that where duty calls the American soldier always has and always can be relied upon to follow the flag. The brave and heroic young men who compose the rank and file of our army in the Philippines and elsewhere in the scattered islands of the seas, no less than the gallant and chivalric men who lead them, are there under orders, in obedience to duty as soldiers fighting the battles of their country, against the disease and dangers of a tropical sun—a tropical climate. They have, by their courage, their fidelity, and devotion to duty, upheld the glory and renown of American arms, the honor of the flag, and the dignity and prestige of our country. But it is not improper to pause and ask the question whether the policy of the Administration which sends these brave men to these islands is not wrong.

If not required by some reasonant patients of the sease as a section to determine the sease and and the dignity and prestige of our country.

policy of the Administration which sends these brave men to these islands is not wrong.

If not required by some paramount national exigency, or demanded by some vital American principle involved, I say we should get out of the islands at the earliest possible moment. We are paying our Army in the field to subjugate the insurrectos, and supporting another army of Federal officeholders sent there from this country to eat out their substance at high and exorbitant salaries. These Federal officeholders and political favorites now in the islands are doubtless in favor of holding the Philippines for "eternity and a day." I can not blame them very much for feeling friendly to American occupation when I look over the list and see the good fat jobs they hold. I grant you that these men are men of high character and well fitted for their duties. Some of them are the ablest men the country affords—learned, scholarly, and accomplished—and may be safely intrusted to perform their duties honestly, faithfully, and well.

My criticism is not directed against the personnel of the official appointees of the President in those islands. It is the policy that creates the offices and authorizes their appointment. policy that abdicates the function of legislating here at home by the Congress of the United States, where the Constitution vests this power, and transfers that function to a "Philippine Commission" over in those islands. It is the policy that creates a horde of Federal appointees, always the favorites of the Administration in power, and foists them upon the people of the islands without their consent and, no doubt, against their will; fixes exorbitant salaries and requires them to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the Philippine Islands. It is against this policy, this imperial system of government, that I enter my protest and denounce as violative of every cardinal principle of our Republic. I wish now, Mr. Chairman, to incorporate as part of my remarks a list of some of our colonial officers and their salaries, furnished by the War Department, now performing duty in the Philippines. the Congress of the United States, where the Constitution vests

These, Mr. Chairman, are but mild samples of the benevolent assimilation we are giving the Filipinos in these islands of the seas over in the Orient. These are the types of occidental Christian civilization with which we hope to break up the tribal bands of the oriental archipelago and compel them to adopt American customs, American habits, American modes of living and thinking—in short, to transform their civilization—an oriental and tropical civilization—alien to us in blood, tradition, and history, and teach them a new civilization to which they are incapable of adapting themselves, a thing heretofore never successfully ac-complished and believed to be hereafter impossible of achievement. But they are capable of organizing and conducting a government of their own, and have shown themselves worthy of it by fighting for it.

To hold such a people in subjection, to compel them by force against their will to submit to a government imposed upon them not of their choosing, in which they have no voice, is, Mr. Chairman, according to my conception, a violation of every fundamental principal of our Government, of every tradition of our history, and of the very soul and spirit of the Declaration of Independence; and yet, Mr. Chairman, this is just what we are doing and proposing to do in the Philippine Islands. That the people of the islands desire independence and self-government I take it there can be no doubt. It is demonstrated by the testimony of those who have visited the islands and conversed and mingled with their people, and by the numerous petitions and memorials of their who have visited the Islands and conversed and mingled with their people, and by the numerous petitions and memorials of their people sent and addressed to the Congress of the United States. Then why deny it to them? What reasons have been assigned by gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber; what reasons have been assigned by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who reported this bill?

None, Mr. Chairman, except that we are in the Philippines, and we are there to stay. None except that the fortunes of war

None, Mr. Chairman, except that we are in the Philippines, and we are there to stay. None, except that the fortunes of war brought to us the Philippine Islands and cast upon us the duty to govern and take care of them. That they came to us not of our own seeking, but they came, and we will hold them permanently—for "eternity and a day," to use the unique and somewhat original expression of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], whatever that may mean. So we are given to understand by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois-and I presume he speaks for his party, speaks for the Administration—that we are to hold these islands in perpetuity and for all time, and according to his idea and the theory of his party, to be governed by Congress in the exercise of its discretion, without the Constitution and without any of the salutary restraints imposed by that instrument. Already a law has been enacted by Congress vesting in the President of the United States and such persons as he may designate all civil, political, judicial, and executive authority to govern these islands. Pursuant to this extraordinary, remarkable, and unprecedented grant of authority, the President has appointed what is known as the "Philippine Commission," of which Judge Taft, of Ohio, is chairman, and this Commission is now in the Philippines.

This Commission is vested with, and is now and has been since its organization engaged in, the enactment of laws and in the estabits organization engaged in, the enactment of laws and in the establishment of civil and municipal governments in various provinces, cities, and towns in these islands for the government of these people. At this session of Congress another law has been enacted ratifying and confirming the tariff duties fixed by the Philippine Commission upon all articles included in the Philippine schedule exported from and imported into the Philippine Islands, and further extending the Dingley tariff law and applying its appropriate to all commerce between the United States and ing its provisions to all commerce between the United States and the Philippine Islands. Both of these laws, Mr. Chairman, utterly the Philippine Islands. Both of these laws, Mr. Chairman, utterly ignore the Constitution and defy the mandate of its provisions. This is justified, or perhaps I should better say attempted to be justified, by the advocates of this new, strange, and un-American doctrine—this colonial policy, if you please—upon the alleged ground that the Philippine Islands, while belonging to, are not a part of, the United States, and hence not subject to the provisions of the Constitution. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield my consent to a dectrine that permits the exercise of such arbitrary and described the constitution. to a doctrine that permits the exercise of such arbitrary and despotic power over any people under the flag and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

I can not yield my support to a policy that places the property, personal rights, liberty, and destiny of a people subject to the jurisdiction of our Government at the disposal of such arbitrary and unrestrained power of the legislative branch of the Government, whose discretionary will shall become the supreme law. I care not how much confidence we may have in the good intentions, integrity, and patriotism of the party in power or those which may come after, no party, no Congress, no legislative body in a republic like ours should ever be intrusted with such dangerous and despotic power.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another phase of this question that must appeal to the calm and sober judgment of our people. I have heard the charge iterated and reiterated in the course of this and other discussions upon this floor by gentlemen on that side of the Chamber that the Democratic minority had driven and forced the Administration into the late war with Spain against forced the Administration into the late war with Spain against the better judgment and over the protest of the Republican majority, and now that we are in the business Democrats are attempting to shirk responsibility for the results, for the logical sequence of that war. While it may be true, Mr. Chairman, that the Republican majority—at least a portion of that majority—reluctantly yielded to the demands and will of the people in declaring war against Spain and equally true that the Democratic minority were somewhat persistent in urging the necessity of some action upon the part of Congress to put a stop to that unholy war then being carried on at our very doors, a war which had degenerated into a war of extermination of the Cuban people, waged and conducted in defiance of all well-known usages and rules of civilized warfare, involving serious damage to American interests—while this may be true, yet I disclaim for the Democratic party that it is entitled to all the credit for such a monopoly of patriotism. That war was commenced by common consent for a high and holy cause, but the war with Spain has no necessary connection with and affords no adequate excuse or justification for our presence in the Philippines now. This is a mere pretense, a mere sham, a hypocritical pose to cover up and conceal the real purposes of the party in power—the real motives that actuate and control those who are molding and shaping this Philippine policy. Tell me, Mr. Chairman, if you please, what connection direct or indirect the presence of our Army in the Philippine Islands to-day has or sustains to the war with Spain—a war that has been concluded for more than three years and a treaty of peace entered into? What relation does the present waged and conducted in defiance of all well-known usages and and a treaty of peace entered into? What relation does the present war against the people of the Philippine Islands—carried on, not against Spain, for Spain has ceded all the rights she ever posnot against Spain, for Spain has ceded at the rights she ever possessed to us, but against the people of the Philippines because they refused to yield up their contest for independence—abandon their struggle for freedom—their hope for liberty. What relation does it bear to the war with Spain?

None whatever, Mr. Chairman, and the advocates of this nefarious business must find some other barricade behind which to hide and shelter. Assuming the guise and garb of an unreal civilization; untrue to every principle and tradition of our great Republic; actuated by the base and sordid motives of selfishness. greed, and cupidity; utterly forgetful and wrecklessly disregardful of our own open and tacit promises, we arrogate to ourselves the right to take their lives, destroy their property, and lay waste their country unless they surrender to our imperial will. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we are wrong in our war, in our policy in the Philippine Islands, and the sooner we candidly confess and acknowledge it the better it will be for all concerned, but especially for the American people, and the honor and glory of the great American Republic.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection, and right here, let me say in reference to another suggestion made in the course of this dis-

The inclination to drift into royalty is so manifest in the official center of our Government that it is now suggested, even by so distinguished a gentleman as the chairman of the great Appro priations Committee of this House, that later on we will be called upon to make an appropriation out of the public Treasury to defray the expenses of an embassy of special envoys, to be appointed by the President, to represent the United States Government at the coronation of King Edward. Our Government seems no longer content to follow the usual and hitherto universal custom of intrusting our ambassador at the Court of St. James with the function of giving expression to such interest as all Americans feel in the crowning of England's sovereign. No; we must abandon the simplicity of democratic institutions, of republican government, and ape the mannerisms and customs of monarchy, bow ourselves on bended knees to gilded crowns on empty heads. We must emulate the imperial example of fawning courtiers who kneel and prostrate themselves before His Royal Majesty. I have no criticisms to offer on England's coronation jubilee—none to the ceremonies of crowning this man as her King, if the British nation and the English people see fit to do so. -none to the ceremonies of crowning this man as her But I do say that I think it wrong and a national humiliation to tax the American people to pay the expenses of any select coterie of official favorites chosen to go there to represent the American people at this royal spree.

And for my part, Mr. Chairman, I would say not one dollar, not one cent, for any such ignoble purposes. We are the chosen representatives, the public servants, of the American people, of the American Republic, and if we are true to our traditions, true to our and the public, and it we are true to our traditions, true to our past history, true to the memory of our sires and the principles for which they fought, bled, and died, and are in touch with the patriotic sentiment that throughout our country animates and inspires the American heart, we will refuse to vote their money for any such unnecessary and unpatriotic purpose. Kings and emperors of the Old World do not pay us tribute by the delegation of special ambassadors from Europe to express their sentiments of good will and do homage to our President and people upon the occasion of our inauguration ceremonies. Why, then, should we take pride and feel honored in having American representatives hang around a throne and pay homage to one who rules, not by the voice of the people or because of personal merit, but because by accident of birth he is the eldest son in the royal line of descent from George III? Well might His Royal Majesty salute our visiting envoys: "I, the royal and crowned heir of your former lord and King, George the Third, accept with a keen sense of pleasure the respectful homage and adoration paid me by the repentant descendants of George Washington.

No, Mr. Chairman, the American people are not admirers of kings. They do not admire the systems of government they represent. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, as much as they respect and love the common people of England; as proud as they feel of the blood, common language, literature, and civilization inherited the blood, common language, iterature, and civilization inherited from the mother country, the American people despise and de-test the idea of kingcraft, of monarchy, of the assumed divine right to rule. They recall with a new tingle in their blood that England is to-day engaged in the unholy cause of attempting to crush the life of two weak Republics in South Africa and destroy the liberties of a brave, chivalrous, and Christian people. They are reminded by this unholy crusade against the struggling, pa tient, patriotic Boers of their past experience, and in their great heart of hearts pray that these poor, oppressed, and persecuted patriots may take courage from our example and share a like glorious victory, as when this same England held us by the throat and throttled us until we threw her off with indignant scorn at the mouth of belching cannon, keen-edged sword, and saber stroke. Gentlemen boast of our Anglo-Saxon blood and inheritance, and seem to think we should feel especially proud that we are related in these respects to England. I am as proud of all that we are related in these respects to England. I am as proud of all that we owe to England as any man upon this floor, and am as willing to accord credit where it is due. But our people are not all of Anglo-Saxon blood or descent, and I am glad of it. I think we have a better, a superior civilization from the mingling of the better blood and races of all countries. Our population is a concrete population, composed of English, French, German, Hollanders, Swedes. Norwegians, Irish, Scotch, Italians, Russians, and other nationalities and their extractions. These other countries are likewise our mother countries, and none of them but what have treated us better than old mother England. We are the heirs of all the good and great who have wrought the highest and best in all the fields of useful and elevating activity in all the countries of the earth. I therefore suggest that our participation in the observance of these coronation ceremonies will, under existing circumstances, be taken as a discrimination among the reigning monarchies of Europe, and be regarded everywhere as evidence that we are in sympathy with England's cruel war against the South African Republics. To remain silent when we should express sympathy for the Boers in their unequal struggle for liberty is a national reproach, but to show in an official and public way our indorsement or approval of England's course is infinitely worse. country stand for liberty everywhere, not only in South Africa, but in the Philippines as well.

Mr. Chairman, the spirit of liberty burns in the hearts of all men. Although it may be weak in the Filipino heart, still it has an abiding place there. It was instinct in the breasts of those who dared and died in the cause of our freedom, our liberty, our independence. This was the spirit to which Patrick Henry gave utterance in that outburst of his soul when he said in the Virginia House of Burgesses, "Give me liberty or give me death." [Ap-

It was the same as that to which Abraham Lincoln gave utterance when he said that "for a man to govern himself is self-government, but for a man to govern himself and another without that other's consent was more than self-government; it was oppression;" that "a nation which denies to others the same right to liberty which it claims for itself will not long itself enjoy it."

Sirs, the love of liberty, the aspirations for freedom, are natural passions of the human heart. Since time began, since the great Creator breathed into the nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul, the fires of liberty have smouldered and burned in the human breast. In all the ages of the world, in all lands and climes, that passion has lived. It has faced the scorn and frowns of royalty. It has defied the edicts of kings and despotic decrees of crowned heads. It has challenged the combined cruelties of inquisitions, prisons, and dungeons to crush it. It has paid the last full measure of its devotion at the stake. It has reared monuments throughout the world to commemorate its virtues and shed undying luster upon countless fields of battle on which it has struggled through all the dark and gloomy past.

In the heart of the far-away brown man in the Tropics of the Philippines, as in the great hearts of the liberty-loving Boers in the stricken land of the South African Republics, this love, this passionate longing for liberty, throbs and pulsates the same as in our own. In the name of the great American Republic, the only great Republic of the world founded upon this cardinal principle and exemplifying its virtues; in the name of this, the greatest, the grandest, most powerful in influence and glorious in achievements in all the annals of time, I appeal to the calm and sober thought of the nation, and confidently believe that when the sober sense of the nation, and conndently believe that when the sober sense of our people are once aroused to a fair and just appreciation of the awful responsibilities resting upon us that they will turn away from the tint and tinsel, pomp and splendor of this "Republican god of imperialism" and return once more to the God of their fathers, to worship at the more congenial shrine of the "Goddess of Liberty." [Loud applause.]

[Mr. WATSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order. General debate upon the bill being closed, the Clerk will proceed with the second reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as fol-

COLLECTING THE REVENUE FROM CUSTOMS.

To defray the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, being additional to the permanent appropriation for this purpose, on account of the fiscal years as follows:

For the fiscal year 1902, $1.750.000.

For the fiscal year 1901, $100,000.

Mr. SELBY. Mr. Chairman, in the bill now under consideration is a provision for the erection of military barracks at Manila. If this appropriation is a necessary one for the temporary comfort and protection of our troops there, then it may not be so objectionable; but if it is the beginning or continuation of a system of appropriations for permanent military establishments in the Philippines without definite ending and for the purpose of keeping the inhabitants of those distant islands in subjection under military rule, then I am opposed to the measure. The expenditures of vast sums of money and the great loss of life incurred in the attempt to conquer and subjugate the Filipinos that the Republican party may have the honor of fathering a "new policy" heretofore party may have the honor of fathering a "new policy" heretofore unknown to the system of American government—contrary to history and precedent, contrary to the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, contrary to all Christian teaching in this country, contrary to the God-given rights of humanity, and contrary to all the better instincts of American manhood—now admonish us that colonialism is a crime against the people of these United States

the people of these United States.

Three hundred millions of dollars are already wasted—worse than wasted—in trying to force upon the people of this country the Republican dream of colonialism. But this is the least part of the cost. There is another loss to the country which money can not replace, and that is the loss of more than 11,000 brave American soldiers—the best of American manhood. But the deluded politicians who are following this ignis fatuus seem not to care for life or money in their mad race for what they call commercial supremacy. With them the dollar seems to be of more importance than men, provided they get the dollar.

Is it possible that the Republican party, whose name once stood for human freedom, will follow this ignis fatuus in the Philippines with a persistence and recklessness known only to the voracity of greed and the cruelty of pirates? Take the time, gentlemen, to think it over. Why should the people hesitate to denounce this "new policy" called colonialism? What is there in it for the man who toils—who earns his bread in the sweat of What are the benefits labor is to receive from this new policy—these colonies in the Orient—in return for this criminal sacrifice of life and treasure? You had better stop now and think about it. You would better ask yourselves now, Are we drifting from the Republic to the Empire? Is it not time to pause, to halt, and view the situation in the light of reason, and ask the meaning of this armed struggle in these islands of the Orient? What of good or evil will it bring us? Is there to be no cessation of this strife—no truce for those who fight for home, liberty, and independence?

And let me ask, Will this appropriation of $500,000, and other appropriations of millions to follow, bring us any nearer to peace and safety in those islands, or will it be to foster a standing army and safety in those islands, or will it be to foster a standing army there that military gentlemen may have positions of profit and others opportunities for plunder? In a few days the distinguished gentleman having this bill in charge will report others containing still greater, much greater, amounts for the Army and Navy and civil Commission over there. These bills, too, will not be in the interest of peace, liberty, and safety for those distant people, nor will they be for the purpose of building up cities and towns of commerce, nor to favor agriculture, manufactures, and labor, but they will be for the purpose of carrying on a more vigorous prosecution of the war, for the desolation of the country, "so that a bird flying over the land can not live" after the Army is done with its march of destruction. Such is, I understand, to be the humane policy of General Bell in the province of Batangas. He is to wage a war of extermination there. That is what it means, for he says that "a policy should be adopted that will, as soon as possible, make the people want peace, and want is what it means, for he says that "a policy should be adopted that will, as soon as possible, make the people want peace, and want it badly;" and then he issues an order as a Christmas gift to the Filipinos, after the fashion of Weyler in Cuba, concentrating all the inhabitants within the limits of a certain established zone, under penalty of confiscation of goods and the certainty of being treated as traitors and spies if found outside of the prescribed limits.

Is this the work of "criminal aggression" or of "benevolent assimilation?" The military call it "pacification." An American who loves liberty and independence, and is willing that other men who loves liberty and independence, and is willing that other men shall enjoy these blessings, would call it military despotism. Whatever we may choose to call it, the devil looks on admiringly and approvingly. He is doing a wholesale business in the Philippines just now—a most valuable ally to General Chaffee and General Bell in their work of "pacification." Government by the military power is a government of force, and this is despotism. What General Bell is doing openly in Batangas and Laguna General Chaffee is doing secretly at Luzon. What American ever dreamed that within four years after our denunciation of Weylerism in Cuba our generals in the Philippines would be following the notable and brutal methods of that Spanish dictator in Cuba? But such is the evolution of militarism; such the fruits But such is the evolution of militarism; such the fruits of government without the consent of the governed. Do you believe that the methods now being pursued by the military in those islands will promote peace and good will there? If it does it will be the peace born of extermination—the peace that death

We have never learned the whole truth about our warfare and its results in the Philippines; perhaps we never shall, for the party in power, riding its military horses of conquest and of colonialism, does not believe that the people should know the truth concerning its "new policy." This "new policy" business has given birth to the biggest crop of liars at Washington and Luzon known outside the realms of hades. It has turned out that no Republican can visit Manila and return to Washington a truthful man. Even the Commission headed by Governor Taft is largely under suspicion of prevarication, if not of fraud, while Generals Otis and Chaffee have always been under suspicion. Is it possible that large salaries and the hope of great perquisites influence these gentlemen and their retainers in distorting the situation at these gentlemen and their retainers in distorting the situation at Luzon? Who knows, for the almighty dollar is a great magnet in all colonial schemes, and its cobra head is visible in all the Philippines. Let me call your attention to the magnificent salaries, payable in gold, voted to themselves by the civil Commission at Manila. Compare this salary of $20,000 of Governor Taft with that of $6,000 received by Governor Yates, of Illinois, and its munificence, as well as imperial extravagance, will be seen at once. Illinois contains a population of four millions. It is one of the greatest States in the Union, and to be its governor is an honor next to that of President of the United States.

No wonder that Governor Taft is sick and broken down in health! The weight of his salary is enough to break down a stronger man, and that, together with the weight of secrets of "pacification" he carries with him back to this country, and which he will not dare to fully tell the people, will be quite enough to make him old before his time. And while I am on this question make him old before his time. And while I am on this question of salaries permit me to call attention to the salary grab or bribe contained in the agreement with that good old slave-holding polygamous Mohammedan, the Sultan of Sulu, who is "monarch of all he surveys," of the island of Mindanao. This agreement was another and different kind of "pacification" from that of Generals Chaffee and Bell. It provides for the payment of salaries of $9,120 a year, payable monthly, to this old harum-scarum Mohammedan and his royal attendants. Besides this, it was stated that $9,120 a year, payable monthly, to this old harum-scarum Moham-medan and his royal attendants. Besides this, it was stated that in order to make him see the "beneficence" of American repub-lican institutions a present of $10,000 in Mexican money was made him as "evidence of good will," and thus it was stated that His Highness the Sultan of Sulu and of all Mindanao became, and no doubt still is, an ardent admirer of American generosity and morality.

No doubt every morning with the rising sun this new royal subject of the United States turns his face to the east and salutes the American flag with "Great is Allah and the Republican party! Blessed is the 'pacification' that bringeth me Mexican dollars!" And this royal scoundrel will no doubt be a loyal Republican as long as he lives, and some day when "pacification" of the islands is completed, if it ever is completed, he will receive the appointment of postmaster-general of the imperial colony of Mindanao. Glorious Sultan of Sulu! Magnificent King of Mindanao! The American flag bows to you and your lovely harem.

Great indeed is Republican imperialism in the distant Orient. Mr. Chairman, we are told that the President of the United States

Mr. Chairman, we are told that the President of the United States and emperor of the Philippines is clothed with such extraordinary autocratic power under the Spooner resolution that he can direct—even command—the expenditure of money in the Philippines in any manner he sees fit; that as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy his power is unlimited over these rebellious islands. Perhaps that is true; but while it is true it is a power that belongs to monarchy and to the empire. No man, be he President, King, or Emperor, should have such unlimited power over men and money. It is a one-man power that should have no advocates in this country. It is unrepublican—full of dangers, present and future, to our Republic. This Medusa-headed Spooner resolution is, in my opinion, the most dangerous legislation of the century. It is in spirit and letter, if carried out to its full extent and purpose, the egg that will in time hatch out the empire. Its operation at least will silently and surely change our form of government to that so earnestly desired by Hamilton in 1787, when he "anticipated the time would come when others as well as himself would join in the praise bestowed by Mr. Neckar on the British constitution, namely, that it is the only government in the world which unites public strength with individual security."

We had Anglomaniacs in 1787 and we have them now. These followers of the Hamilton idea of a "strong government" are now openly for adopting the colonial system of Great Britain in the governing of our "appurtenant territory." This territory is to be held and governed by the United States, but never to become a part of the United States—citizenship of its inhabitants is not to be allowed. If this territory and its people are unfit to become part and parcel of this Republic, what in the name of common sense do we want of the Philippines? Is it for the purpose of furnishing partisan favorites, military and civil, with paying provincial offices and positions? Is it for purposes of exploitation or for both offices and plunder? No matter what the purpose, wisdom dictates that we should let them alone to work out their own salvation, under our protection if needed. Had Bryan been elected President last year the Filipinos would now have their independence and a government of their own; there would be peace to-day in the Philippines, and the cost of life and treasure there would be a thing of the past; our soldiers would have returned to peaceful homes and our war ships would be in peaceful harbors. Instead of that we are still in the hornet's nest, and the hornets seem to breed faster than we can destroy them.

What is the value of these islands of the Orient? What of them and their people that the Republican party becomes crazed to possess them and rule them? There they are, 2,000 of them—these islands of the Orient—the Orient that has killed so many tradehunting people. They sit out there in the sea, a nest of them, 7,000 miles away from us, under the tropical sun, unfit for the homes of white men or of civilized beasts. For four hundred years Spain held partial dominion over them and kept a standing army there to protect commerce and commercial people from the depredations of wild men from the jungle and the mountains. And this long possession helped to make Spain poor. Her 400 years with soldiers and friars in the Philippines, principally in Luzon, produced in time a type of men neither Spanish nor Malay. The work of keeping order devolved on the soldier. The work of education belonged to the priests or friars. Whatever knowledge of Christianity the inhabitants obtained was due to the work of the friars. These friars soon wielded a great influence over their converts, and in time became possessed of great wealth, by oppressive stealth. These converts were taught the Spanish language as well as Spanish deceit. Some of them were educated in European schools to make them useful to the Government; some became well educated for the professions and for business purposes, and became merchants and tradesmen; but by far the most were toilers of the sea and land.

Spanish imperialistic greed divided Luzon into two classes, master and slave. There were the rich and the poor and the very poor. The Spaniards they knew, while ships of commerce from foreign ports taught them of other races of men, but during all the years of their oppression and distress under Spanish rule they had never heard of the "great Republican party." By far the greater population of the island was "wild and woolly," of the Malay-Mohammedan variety. Spain ruled, and we all know what that means. Corruption in office of the greatest sort was the rule of official conduct—a money-sucking crew. The Filipino was robbed of his land by the friars and robbed of his labor and goods by the officials. Tyranny, cruelty, brutality of an inquisitorial sort were practiced upon the natives. The poorer classes were permitted to live on a little rice, but no expansion of the stomach was allowed. Tyranny and oppression by Spanish soldier and civilian taught the Filipino the meaning of liberty. The city of Manila was the city of refuge for most of the "civilized" scoundrels on the island of Luzon, with occasional visitors of like character from the adjoining islands or from foreign seaport towns. This city was the delight, also, of the resident Spaniards, and was under the special protection of Spain's soldiery, both aristocratic and scoundrelly. Spain never learned any sense in the treatment of her colonies. The rule by force was her colonial rule of conduct.

One day these Filipinos found a leader who longed to taste the sweets of freedom, and they rebelled against Spanish oppression and robbery. They had done this many times before, but this rebellion was different from previous uprisings—it would not down at the bidding of Spain or her army. Reconcentrado orders failed to stop it. The Spanish army and Spanish war ships failed to put it down. Spain was at war with Cuba—another oppressed people longing for liberty and independence—and later at war with the United States. In Manila Bay were the war ships of Spain. One morning before breakfast an American fleet of war ships, under command of Admiral Dewey, steamed into the bay, and before the smoke of battle could clear away, the Spanish war ships went to "join McGinty at the bottom of the sea." Glorious victory! Deified Dewey! Don't destroy the city of Manila if possible to avoid it. Hold the bay and whip the Spanish army, was the order from Washington.

bay, and before the smoke of battle could clear away, the Spanish war ships went to "join McGinty at the bottom of the sea." Glorious victory! Deified Dewey! Don't destroy the city of Manila if possible to avoid it. Hold the bay and whip the Spanish army, was the order from Washington.

These Filipinos worshipped Dewey. He was their savior. He had broken the yoke of oppression. He brought them the dawn of freedom and independence. They said to him, in their gratitude, We will help you fight the Spaniards and drive them from the Philippines. Dewey gave them guns and ammunition and turned them against the common enemy. They fought, and helped the American soldier compel the surrender of Manila. The struggle was over. What were to be the fruits of victory? What the future of the Filipino? Is it to be "liberty or death?" Ah, sir, these are questions still before us. When will they and how will they be answered? We will wait; we will see. It was no trouble for us to whip the Spaniards at Manila, at Cuba, at Porto Rico, and upon the seas, but there is no peace at the Philippines. What is the trouble? Why is it the Filipinos will not take kindly to this Republican "new policy?" Because it is the forcible attempt on our part to take from them all they hold dear—home, liberty, and independence. These are precious rights men will thempt on our part to take from them an they hold dear—home, liberty, and independence. These are precious rights men will fight to secure and maintain. These rights, sacred to ourselves, should be freely accorded to others.

This principle is found in our Declaration of Independence, in the Constitution, in the Monroe doctrine, and in our diplomatic conduct of more than a hundred years. Oh, the miserable and foolish desire of this imperial party to conquor 8,000,000 of people whose only offense is to have in their hearts that love of liberty and independence which God has securedly anchored in the bosoms of all men, in all countries, and in all ages! It is the greatest crime of the century, except that of Great Britain in her attempts to destroy the Boer Republics in South Africa.

It was said by Napoleon that the British Empire would some day find its grave in South Africa. God grant that in our Angliphobia passion for colonial possessions we may not be dig.

It was said by Napoleon that the British Empire would some day find its grave in South Africa. God grant that in our Angliphobia passion for colonial possessions we may not be digging the grave of this Republic in the Philippines. Let us look well before us. The road to empire is beset with dangers. The lust of power, of greed of gold is there, their gorgon heads concealed beneath the cap of liberty.

Let us look backward, seek the lights of history, the record of humanity, and behold the wrecks of monarchies and empires strewn along the highway of nations. They belong to the dead roat.

Let us look backward, seek the lights of history, the record of humanity, and behold the wrecks of monarchies and empires strewn along the highway of nations. They belong to the dead past. The cause? "Man's inhumanity to man." The extravagance of empire induced by accumulated wealth, taken from the fruits of labor, always breeds the evils of empire, and the working poor become poorer until poverty and hunger appear with the torch of revolution, and the earth goes back to chaos until the Creator shall say, "Let there be light." And thus it is, nations live and nations die.

Some writer has said that Roman imperialism had divided the world into two classes—master and slave. That is the fruit imperialism bears. It is a slave maker, a taskmaster that in time brings blight and death to mankind. The rich were masters; the poor, slaves, under Roman imperialism. Great wealth itself always becomes imperious. The good old ways of the Republic are too slow for wealth, and the sober life of honest toil is too tame.

Imperialism is fed and fattened by wealth, and demands an armed force to protect it. Under imperialism, if the poor increase in numbers, the army is open to them. If the poor become wretched, hungry, riotous for work or bread, there is the army to check them, or they can become industrial slaves. The way to build up to the empire is to create millionaires and multimillionaires and concentrate wealth in the hands of the few at the expense of the many. And thus by such concentration and aggregation of wealth into the hands of the few the many become poor. It has always been so. Protected industries in this country have built unto themselves an empire of wealth so great that its power is felt everywhere—a fetich god to which mankind is bowing. This creature, wealth, is never satisfied, and looks about for its kind, that it may seek and draw to itself all the fruits of labor. And thus having aggregated all things to itself—it controls all things—until now it has become more powerful than government; in fact, it is said to govern government, and in such a way that the principles of the Declaration of Independence are denied by it, and all Constitutional restrictions disregarded. Why? Because these principles and restrictions sometimes are in the way and hamper and interfere with the great commercial projects of ambitious men and the schemes of corrupt partisans. With them everything is regarded as merchandise, purchasable, marketable, even the brains of men, the votes of men.

And so it happens that greed, which is the soul of wealth, stops at nothing to accomplish its purpose, is never satisfied, never gets enough. It is organized into syndicates, great corporations, and trusts to control things and men. These have no use for government except for the power it gives them over men and things and the profit it brings them. With them the dollar is supreme over all else, even the bodies and souls of men. These supreme over all else, even the bodies and souls of men. These powerful aggregations of wealth have a way of getting close to the throne of office. It has been said that a whisper from them seems to catch the official ear with potent influence. This powerful influence was present to strike down bimetallism; it was present to prevent tariff reform; it was present to defeat the income tax, and now one can almost feel its freezing breath passing over jething a goal legislation. It is away present whenever so called isthmian canal legislation. It is ever present whenever so-called banking and currency reforms are before Congress, and it has been most potent in committing this country to England's colonial system in our treatment of "appurtenant territory." It has its eye on Porto Rico, on Cuba, and the Philippines.

How can we get from under this money power, whose influence now seems dominant everywhere? First, reform the tariff, which is the mother of all trusts. But they say that is Bryanism. Then let us have Bryanism, and lots of it. Next, reform the money question, so that the power to create money shall be taken away from private corporations and left absolutely with the people. But we are told this is more Bryanism. If so, I say good for Bryan! What a pity he is not the President. Strike down colonialism whenever and wherever it rears its monarchical crest in this country. But we are told that is the Kansas City platform. If so, I am for the Kansas City platform, and everybody ought to be for it. Return to the principles of Jefferson, and Madison, and Jackson, preserving the rights of the "State governments as the most competent administration for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwark against antirepublican tendencies.—the and the surest bulwark against antirepublican tendencies—the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad." Let us have "equal and exact justice to all men," and special privileges to none. Let us have "peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none." Let us have "economy in the public expense that labor nonest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none." Let us have "economy in the public expense, that labor may be lightly burdened." If we have wandered from the principles of Jefferson, "let us hasten to retrace our steps and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty, and safety." But let us indulge a little more in recalling some of the reminiscences of the past three or four years, to show further the potency of organized wealth in this country.

When the beautiful but Spanish-cursed island of Cuba cried to us for help in her struggle against country the Administration.

us for help in her struggle against oppression, the Administration in power was slow to listen to the appeals of that distressed island. For years—a century or more—the Cuban people had fought for their liberty and independence against the brutal oppressions of Spain. Cruelties and punishments and murders had been perpetrated upon these people by Spanish officials and Spanish soldiery unknown to civilized nations. And when nearly 300 Americans lost their lives through Spanish treachery as the Administration still united and height to detail when Harbor, the Administration still waited and hesitated to act. Why? Because the money power feared war would demoralize the stock market and damage the prospects of the Republican party. A great Republican leader openly proclaimed that there would be no war with Spain.

no war with Spain.

But popular feeling and popular indignation ran so high throughout this country that the Republican managers became alarmed, and finally the decree went forth that Cuba should be free and independent. That was right. Every true American indorsed the sentiment and the action of Congress. The declaration was hailed with joy by the Cuban patriots. War with Spain followed. It was a short struggle and was as disgraceful and disastrous to the armies of Spain as it was short. Admiral Schley did the work at Cuba as quickly as Admiral Dewey did it at Manila. General Shafter, an Administration favorite, on account of his great weight, became the paper hero of the land forces, and Sampson, 20 miles away, became the paper hero of the naval forces at Santiago. Ach Gott! How the jackals barked at the heels of these old naval heroes, Schley and Dewey! While the nation cheered there were those in the Army and Navy who jeered; but Schley and Dewey are safely and lovingly enshrined in the hearts of the people never to be forgotten while the Repubin the hearts of the people never to be forgotten while the Republic lives.

And what of our volunteers in Cuba? We all remember their splendid service. We remember the attempt to fatten them on "embalmed beef," the expressed indignation of General Miles, the investigation, the court-martial verdict against Eagan, the whitewashed report that embalmed beef is "sweet and good," and how the President would not enforce the verdict against Eagan, but retired him to his coffee plantation in the island of Hawaii on a salary of $5,000 a year. We remember all these things and many more that go to our discredit at home and abroad. Our volunteers were the true heroes of the war, and we honor them. But the war ended, and to-day Cuba stands before us imploring us to give her relief, to save her from bankruptcy and poverty. Will we grant her any trade concessions? I doubt it—none at least that will do her people any good. The great power of the sugar trust forbids it, and, as the Republican party lives on sugar, it will obey the commands of the sugar trust. There are some gentlemen bold enough to say "Cuba be d—d. We owe her nothing. She is ungrateful. She can wait until she has an organized government approved by the Republican party before asking us for anything more." Cane sugar and beet sugar appland this declaration of independence. Great is sugar! Poor

But the people of that unfortunate island will not have to wait much longer in order to learn the Republican party's programme concerning the treatment they are to receive.

As a matter of fact, that party would like to see Cuba annexed to the United States as "appurtenant territory" in order to fill out the measure of colonial possessions; but the time is not yet ripe for that—not quite. Cuba must be patient. Cuba must wait for the annexation that Democrats will give her, and become a gem in the American system of States.

"ACCRETION, NOT COLONIZATION," has been the American doctrine and rule of action from the beginning of our Government. This policy had the indorsement of Washington, Jefferson, and Madison. It was officially announced by Mr. Calhoun, Secretary of State, in 1844, in the following lan-

It is our policy to increase by growing and spreading out into unoccupied regions, assimilating all we incorporate—in a word, to increase by accretion and not through conquest by the addition of masses held together by the cohesion of force.

And in 1883 Mr. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State, declared

The policy of this Government, as declared on many occasions in the past, as tended toward avoidance of possessions disconnected from the main

This policy is in harmony with our form of government—in accord with the principles of the Declaration of Independence and is founded in reason and humanity. The only exception to this policy was in the desired acquisition of Cuba by us. The reasons for this exception are given by Jefferson, as follows:

It will be objected to our receiving Cuba, that no limit can then be drawn to our future acquisitions. Cuba can be defended by us without a navy, and this develops the principle which ought to limit our views. Nothing should be accepted which would require a navy to defend it.

Again, in 1823, in his letter to Mr. Monroe, Jefferson, in speaking of the desirability of our acquisition of Cuba, said:

I candidly confess that I have ever looked on Cuba as the most interesting addition which could ever be made to our system of States. The control which, with Florida Point, this island would give us over the Gulf of Mexico and the countries and Isthmus bordering on it, as well as those waters flow into it, would fill up the measure of our political well-being.

Thus owing to the important geographical situation of Cuba-her commanding position over the waters of the Caribbean Sea, the Gulf of Mexico, the mouth of the Mississippi River, successive Administrations, from Jefferson to Harrison, have all agreed to the importance of our ultimately possessing that island and of permitting no other country to ever gain a footing there. We desire Cuba, not for colonial purposes, but with a view to her territory becoming a State in the American Union of States. This would give Cuba peace and prosperity.

We desire Cuba for the reasons given by Jefferson and because she is the great doorstep to the United States. But at no time has it ever been the desire to acquire Cuba except to make her a State in our system of States. The idea of acquiring the island for the purpose of making her territory colonial never occurred to any American statesman. The idea was too un-American to have been entertained by anyone having a just regard for our republican institutions. The doctrine that the Declaration of Indelican institutions. The doctrine that the Declaration of Independence is an obsolete doctrine—that the Constitution of the United States is not one of delegated powers, applicable to the States and Territories alike, but is an "elastic Constitution" that reaches where you want it to reach and does not reach where you do not want it to reach, a sort of a "rubber-neck" affair—is a modern invention of the Republican party to suit its ideas of "ex-

"Appurtenant territory" is a new coinage of the gold-standard variety, meaning territory unfit for States, but fit only for colonies, to be controlled outside of the Constitution in any manner Congress may choose to assume. Congress may withhold government from these territories, or may establish any form of government, from republican in form to provincial or colonial, or military. The situation to-day and the position taken by the Republican party, with its "elastic Constitution" ideas, are such as would naturally grow up out of the doctrines of Hamilton. It is the sequel of a long line of decisions of the Supreme Court, whereby the powers of the General Government have been en-larged to the detriment of the States (which created both Con-stitution and Government) by the doctrine of "implied powers" by a forced construction process.

This "expansion" of authority has now become imperial in its character to such a degree that to go further would be to reach the point of revolution. It is not the name republic that makes a republic. When legislation becomes the vehicle for carrying great fortunes to those who are favored by it at the expense of labor, when the doctrine of "equal rights to all men and special privileges to none" is disregarded by the people's servants, the Republic is near the danger line.

Another thought occurs to me concerning these distant islands in the Philippines: Will gentlemen tell me what they seek there with the Army and the Navy and their civil government Commission, with its military and civil appendages? Is it the mineral wealth, the timber, sugar plantations, rice and tobacco and hemp lands there that you want? Is it trade relations you wish to establish? Then why do you seek to impose tariff restrictions that amount to a prohibition of trade? Is it to give a chance to that amount to a prohibition of trade? Is it to give a chance to school-teachers to educate the little chimpanzees over there? Perhaps it is to perfect the gold standard and teach its blessings. Maybe there are opportunities there for establishing banks, building railroads, mud roads, harbor building, public buildings, dredging of rivers and bays, and for a thousand other things, including colonial offices. Perhaps it is a determination to demonetize Mexican dollars and make them redeemable at par in gold or is it simply to increase the "sphere of influence" of the Republican party? Whatever your mission there, Christian or Gentile, Mohammedan or Hoodoo, you are making a terrible mess

There is not a thing produced in the Philippines that we need here. This country would get along prosperously, even if the Philippines were sunk in the ocean or we had never heard of them. Why should we spend millions over there when the money could be put to much better use at home? Why not apply it to making needed improvements in our own country—to public buildings, to irrigation for the arid West, the improvement of rivers, harbors, and bays, and to increase pensions to old veterans of the civil war, and to give pensions to all of those old soldiers and to widows of soldiers who are not now receiving pensions? Why should this Philippine hopper of extravagance and folly be fed by the already overburdened taxpayers of this country just to satisfy the ambi-tion of the Republican party in its scheme of colonialism? I regard this scheme the worst foe to American labor that has appeared during the nineteenth century. The man who labors should think of this "new policy" of the Republican party, and ask himself what of good or evil will it bring him. Labor in a republic is king, if it wills it; in the empire it is cringing servility.

king, if it wills it; in the empire it is cringing servility.

There is nothing great or grand in science and art that is not due to labor. Wealth, ease, and comfort all depend upon it. Labor should be left free to earn its just reward. "Equality is equity." And now what of the millions of people—the common people of this country, who constitute the foundation of its prosperity in this country, who constitute the foundation of its prosperity in peace and who are its defenders in war—what heed will they give to this "new policy" that so silently and insidiously threatens them? Will they turn their eyes to the "cross of gold" worshipped by greed and be damned, or will they turn to the cross of peace and be saved? Will they choose the road that leads to empire, or "the road that leads to peace, liberty, and safety?" Will they still sit under the seductive influence of organized wealth and wait and wait, until compelled to pass under the yoke of imperial servility?

The Democratic party stands opposed to this Philippine business. It opposes imperialism. It opposes colonialism. It opposes militarism. Its policy is not evasive. It does not appeal to the brutal instincts of men, but it appeals to their love of liberty and independence, their love of justice and right. It believes that colonialism has no place in our system of government, that it is a creation of monarchy and empire.

No Democrat can sanction a policy so un-American. The Democratic position on the Philippine question is stated in the platform, as follows:

We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present Administration. It has embroiled the Republic in an unnecessary war, sacrificed the lives of many of its noblest sons, and placed the United States, previously known and applauded throughout the world as the champion of freedom, in the false and un-American position of crushing with military force the efforts of our former allies to achieve liberty and self-government. The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our civilization; they can not be subjects without imperiling our form of government, and as we are not willing to surrender our civilization or to convert the Republic into an empire, we favor an immediate declaration of the nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and, third, protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the republics of Central and South America.

The greedy commercialism which dictated the Philippine policy of the Republican Administration attempts to justify it with the plea that it will pay, but even this sordid and unworthy plea fails when brought to the test of facts. The war of "criminal aggression" against the Filipinos, entailing an annual expense of many millions, has already cost more than any possible profit that could accrue from the entire Philippine trade for years to come. Furthermore, when trade is extended at the expense of liberty the price is always too high.

On the question of militarism the Democratic platform of 1900 declares as follows:

We oppose militarism. It means conquest abroad and intimidation and oppression at home. It means the strong arm which has ever been fatal to free institutions. It is what millions of our citizens have fleed from in Europe. It will impose upon our peace-loving people a large standing army, an unnecessary burden of taxation, and would be a constant menace to their liberties. A small standing and well-disciplined State militia are amply sufficient in time of peace.

This Republic has no place for a vast military establishment, a sure fore-runner of compulsory military service and conscription. When the nation is in danger, the volunteer is his country's best defender. The National Guard of the United States should ever be cherished in the patriotic hearts of a free people. Such organizations are ever an element of strength and safety. For the first time in our history, and coeval with the Philippine conquest, has there been a wholesale departure from our time-honored and approved system of volunteer organization. We denounce it as un-American, un-Democratic, and un-Republican, and as a subversion of the ancient and fixed principles of a free people.

There is no uncertain sound about these declarations of principles are the substantial of the principles of a free people.

There is no uncertain sound about these declarations of principles. There are many great men in the Republican party who warn us against the imperialistic tendencies of their own party warn us against the imperialistic tendencies of their own party leaders; who warn us against a policy of subjugation; who warn us against treating the inhabitants of acquired territory as colonial subjects after the systems of Great Britain and Holland. The entire Democratic party adds its warning voice to the cry of these Republican statesmen. In a few months more the people will be called upon to choose whom they will serve, the Republic or Empire. Will they choose to stand by the ideas of the fathers, for liberty and independence or the ideas of Great Britain for cofor liberty and independence, or the ideas of Great Britain, for colonial subjects? We will wait and see. As for Democracy, the world knows where she stands always when the issue is between British vassalism and American freedom.

"ETERNAL VIGILANCE IS THE PRICE OF LIBERTY."

Remember, it was Republican Rome that made the Empire It was Republican Rome that made conquests and possible. It was Republican Rome that made conquests and took within her greedy grasp province after province by force of her arms, extending her dominion and power over the world.

And it was Imperial Rome that opened the way to lose all the Republic had gained. Her first conquest was the island of Sicily, and here imperialism organized its first province and established its first provincial government. And next Carthage fell a prey to Roman aggression and there arose the province of Africa; then Greece and other countries mutil the week reverse were hearther. Greece and other countries, until the weak powers were absorbed by this one great power. The rule established over these subjugated countries was termed provincial government. this sort of government?

Retaining their native habits, religion, laws, etc., the inhabitants of every province were governed by a military president sent from Rome, with a staff of officers. The provincials were required to pay taxes in money and kind, and these taxes were feathed to pay taxes in money and kind, and these taxes were farmed out by the censors to Roman citizens who, under the name of publicans, settled in the various districts of the provinces. Thus like a network proceeding from a center, the political system of the Romans pervaded the mass of millions of human beings inhabiting the shores of the Mediterranean; and a vast population of various races and languages were bound together population of various races and languages were bound together by the cohesive power of Roman rule."

Imperial Rome! The grandeur that wealth and power could bring was hers. Fame was hers—glory was hers. Wealth en-ervated her rulers and her people; corruption gnawed at her vitals; fame increased a fatal ambition; dissolute power de-bauched her virtue and her morals, and her glory blazed out upon the world but to consume her in its brilliant flame.

Her great imperial highways have been the wonder of the ages; her architecture, grand, colossal, yet beautiful; her acqueducts, public edifices, and temples have never been surpassed. The home of scholars, orators, statesmen—and yet Rome became a country of assassins, poisoners, adulterers, and harlots, all drowned in the cesspool of political vice and corruption, and when the votes of her citizens became an article of merchandise her heart was eaten as with a cancer.

Degenerate Rome! Where now are your armies, your great Degenerate Rome! Where now are your armies, your great generals and orators, your noble patricians, your plebians and slaves, your palaces and temples? The wealth of the world was yours to curse and destroy you. Where now are your Circus Maximus; your great games and feasts, such as imperialism alone could invent and pompously display; your bribes and gifts of corn and wheat and money to keep a depraved populace from riot and tumult? All gone; things of a cruel past buried in the dust of ages. Will the time ever come when mankind will again imitate your glory and grandeur and depravity; will again demand gladiatorial fights in the arena and human sacrifices in imperial gardens and groves, the victims procured from conquered and enslaved provinces?

nerate Rome! Her death spread mental darkness over the Her debauched plutocratic nobles, for the gratification of Degenerate Rome! a weak ambition, for a span of power, an hour of pomp and show, sank the Roman world into eternal night.

There was no deliverance for her people. They had chosen the broad way that led to death.

A Gracchus produced a Marius and a Sulla. He that attempted to stay the tide lost his life, and murder and massacre of populace and nobles held high carnival.

Let us hope that another era of patrician and plebian is not again returning to curse mankind.

And now in conclusion I admonish the people of this country in the words of one who made the Constitution of the United States a special study, and who, on contemplating the consummation of his great labor, said:

tion of his great labor, said:

The past is secure. It is unalterable. The seal of eternity is upon it. The wisdom which it has displayed and the blessings which it has bestowed can not be obscured, neither can they be debased by human folly or human infirmity.

The future is that which may well awaken the most earnest solicitude, both for the virtue and the permanence of our Republic.

The fate of other republics—their rise, their progress, their decline, and their fall—are written but too legibly on the pages of history, if, indeed, they were not continually before us in the startling fragments of their ruin. They have perished, and perished by their own hands.

Prosperity has enervated them, and a venal populace has consummated their destruction. Alternately the prey of military chieftains at home and the ambitious invaders from abroad, they have been sometimes betrayed into a surrender of them by false patriots and sometimes they have willingly sold them for a price to the despot who has bidden highest for his victim. They have disregarded the warning voice of their best statesmen and have persecuted and driven from office their truest friends. They have listened to the fawning sycophant and the base calumniator of the wise and good.

They have reverenced power more in its high abuses and summary movements than in its calm constitutional energy, when it dispensed blessings with an unseen but liberal hand. They have surrendered to faction what belonged to the country.

Patronage and party, the triumph of a popular leader, and the discontents of a day have outweighed all solid principles and institutions of government.

Let us be true to the principles of the Declaration of Independence, let us be true to the Constitution of this Republic, let us honor the memory of our fathers, let us be just to Cuba, let us be just to Porto Rico, let us be just to the Philippines, let us be just to all mankind, and God will bless this nation as a Christian, liberty-loving people were never blessed before. [General applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of building now occupied by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for storage and other purposes, at the rate of $60 per month, $720.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not rise for the purpose of antagonizing any provision in this bill, but I have observed scattered over it numerous items for rent of buildings now occupied by the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, for the rent of a building for the use of a rural free-delivery clerical force, and the like. I have taken the occasion, delivery clerical force, and the like. I have taken the occasion, Mr. Chairman, to ascertain that this Government is now paying out in Washington nearly $200,000, or more accurately $199,505, a year for the rent of offices and buildings for the purposes of storage and the use of the various departments. From the estimate of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, the following is the amount needed for buildings rented by the various departments in Washington:

Treasury Department 12,39 War Department 15,00	For rent of a suitable building	12,300
Navy Department 5,76 Interior Department 48,08	Post-Office Department	1,500
Post-Office Department 17,67 Department of Agriculture 10,84	rural free-delivery force	1,800
Department of Labor 7,50 Department of Justice 16,00 District of Columbia 50.05	Making a total of 1	99,505

It does seem to me that business sense requires this Government to own buildings sufficiently large and commodious for the use of the various departments instead of paying extravagant rents. This Government is rich and powerful. We have to-day probably $175,000,000 surplus money in the Treasury. Business prudence would require that we should at least take two and a half millions of that amount and use it in the construction of a public building for the use of these various departments. It is idle, uninvested, and unproductive. If we do not wish to use a portion of the surplus, then bonds could be issued for that purpose. I see from the papers that our 2 per cent bonds are bringing to-day 108 in the open market.

Now, if we spend two and a half millions in a building situated somewhere between the Post-Office and the War and Navy building, and another in a building, probably costing two or two and a half millions, somewhere in the eastern part of the city, it a hair millions, somewhere in the eastern part of the city, it would afford all the opportunity necessary for the storage of documents and for the use of the clerical force of the various departments, and save this enormous rent. If it costs $2,500,000 or even $5,000,000, 2 per cent would only be $100,000 a year, and thereby at least $100,000 be saved out of the annual appropriations for this purpose. I am informed that the present Post-Office building cost about $3,000,000 and the new Government Printing Office is to cost $2,000,000. It strikes me that this matter ing Office is to cost $2,000,000. It strikes me that this matter ought to be called to the attention of the country and some economy practiced in this respect. [Applause.]

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as fol-

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not see the Delegate from Oklahoma present, and I will offer the following amendment: The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 14, insert "Territory of Oklahoma: For contingent ex-enses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as

FISH COMMISSION.

For the purchase of land for site for the fish-hatching and fish-culture station authorized at Tupelo, Miss., by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1901, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

For the completion of the marine biological station of the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries of Beaufort, N. C., including the construction of buildings and wharfs, the purchase and installation of pumping and electric-light plant, and equipment of the station, $12,500.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered seriously, and I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee ously, and I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Cannon] and the House just a moment to the reason why it is offered. At the last session of Congress a biological station was established on the coast of North Carolina, at Beaufort, and $12,500 was appropriated for its construction. The building is now about completed, and the fund appropriated at the last session being exhausted, it is absolutely necessary that the building be completed and occupied by the summer season, and this amount is necessary for its completion and equipment.

There are only two of these biological stations on the Atlantic coast, this one at Beaufort and the other at Woods Hole, on the coast of Massachusetts, which has been in operation a number of years. The object of the station is to investigate all forms of sea life, and such biological and experimental work must necessarily precede all work of the Fish Commission in the artificial propaga-

It is unnecessary at this late day to state any apology for existence of the Fish Commission or to recite the efforts which have been made in the successful propagation of the various varieties of fish. I have obtained a few figures, however, as illustrating in part the work which they have accomplished. Referring to the New England coast and waters, the last figures available for 1898 show that the catch of cod had increased 43,000,000 in ten years, and inshore cod fisheries have been established and successfully maintained where no cod had been caught before.

The catch of shad along the Atlantic coast had very materially decreased prior to the efforts of the Fish Commission, and as a result of their work in the artificial propagation of this popular variety of sea food there has been a result of the first control of the popular variety. variety of sea food there has been an increase in the catch from 3,000,000 in 1880 to 11,760,000 in 1898, an increase of 30,000,000 pounds. At an expenditure of not exceeding $4,000 shad have been carried to the Pacific coast, and recently there have been caught 5,000,000 pounds upon that coast, where none had been caught before. The catch of salmon on the Pacinc coast has been increased by the work of the Fish Commission. As stated, biological work of this character must precede the work of the Fish Commission. This station was located on the coast of North Carolina for a specific purpose, and after a most careful investigation upon the part of the Commission and the scientists of the country

Some of the reasons for this location were that the species of fish on the South Atlantic coast are entirely different from those on the New England coast. Now, an investigation of their breeding habits, their food, and the manner of their propagation must proceed along entirely different lines from those upon the coast farther north. This location is the nearest point to the Gulf Stream, is in the middle of the zone of the migratory fishes of the entire South Atlantic coast, and is therefore not a local matter peculiar to the State of North Carolina, but the entire country is interested in the completion and equipment of this station, in order that its work may go forward.

The reason for the immediate consideration and passage of this

The reason for the immediate consideration and passage of this amendment is that unless this appropriation is forthcoming the work must stop and at least twelve months will be lost, which will be gained if this appropriation is made available immediately, and I hope the amendment will be adopted by the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee preparing this bill devoted the best part of two days to the items of the Fish Commission, and finally when the bill was reported it was the opinion of the committee that still further investigation ought to be given to this service, and as this was an urgent deficiency bill be given to this service, and as this was an urgent deficiency bill we left the items out as to various establishments, intending to have a further hearing and give further investigation before the general deficiency bill was reported later on in the season. I think we were wise in that conclusion, for the following reasons:

I have nothing against the Fish Commissioner; as an individual he seems to be a very pleasant gentleman. I am not here to allege that he is not performing his duty as he sees it, but I am here, as a foundation of my remarks, to make this declaration: There is no service, so far as I have knowledge, which, in its administration, is so absolutely lawless, so far as the law is concerned, so far as appropriations are concerned, as the Fish Commission service. I say that without any disrespect to any individual. I do not say there is any corruption; I do not inti-But I do say that a provision of law in connection with an appropriation has no more influence upon the Fish Com-mission service than would the pouring of water have upon a duck's back to drown it.

Take this very amendment which my friend on the other side moves here—a matter which we have proposed to allow to go over with other items to the general bill. What are the facts about In the last Congress, on the 12th of May, 1900, an act was passed authorizing the construction of this biological station was passed authorizing the construction of this biological station building for $12,500, and the money was appropriated. That was a separate act, which I have before me. Now let me read from the examination before the Committee on Appropriations:

The Chairman. The first item is marine biological station, North Carolina. My recollection is that $12,500 was set aside to do that work.

Mr. Bowers. Originally; yes, sir. The original bill carried with it $25,000, and at my suggestion it was cut down to $12,500; and I find with the purchase of the property there to complete that station, and install an electric plant, and fully equip it with wharves, buildings, etc.—the location is on an island—will be a little more expensive than we had at first expected it would be.

The Chairman. In other words, you first asked $25,000.

Mr. Bowers. No; we did not ask for anything. A bill was introduced carrying with it an appropriation of $25,000.

The Chairman. On looking into the matter, and prior to any enactment at all, on your own motion you thought $12,500 was enough?

Mr. Bowers. I thought $12,500 at that time would complete it.

The Chairman. And so recommended?

Mr. Bowers. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. Following your recommendation was legislation by Congress. Now you come and say that you want $12,500 additional.

Now listen:

Now listen:

Mr. Bowers. We are building a larger laboratory there than I had originally expected to build.

What right had the Fish Commission to build a larger laboratory than Congress authorized and had in contemplation when the original legislation was enacted? And now my friend from North Carolina rises and moves an appropriation of $12,500 more, in the name of science. This establishment does not hatch any in the name of science. This establishment does not hatch any eggs, but it does allow a lot of scientific gentlemen to go down there, as the examination shows, and study at that university of collegiate investigation, for that is what it is.

The gentleman says that this establishment is like the one at Woods Hole. Vest the establishment at Woods Hole has cost a

The gentleman says that this establishment is like the one at Woods Hole. Yes; the establishment at Woods Hole has cost a good deal of money. Woods Hole is to-day, as I think is shown by this investigation, an annex of Yale and Harvard—supported in large part at public expense. Scientists go down there, and, as stated in this investigation, 400 students—embryo scientists—go down there and study the ways of the animals of the deep blue sea. Now, this may be very proper; it may be all right; but, for one, I have always been opposed to national universities at the expense of the United States Treasury. And I do not want to establish any annexes. But we have Woods Hole, and we have a start down here in North Carolina. The Fish Commissioner says that he wants to build one of these stations on the Great Lakes, and one on the Pacific coast, in order to further scientific-fish culture. I asked him whether we could not find some way to run the "whole shooting match" by science, dispensing with all labor. I wish we could find something of that kind.

I am not here to say that something ought not to be done in this case. I am not here to say that if the Fish Commissioner had gone to work as he first intended when he induced Congress to enact this legislation a little over a year ago, when he said he could do the whole thing for $12,500—when he proposed to cut down the sum originally proposed, $25,000—he would have cut his garment according to his cloth and not changed his plan, as he said he did, in the name of science.

Let me refer to another case. Up in Maine it was discovered about a year ago that they needed a station to study the habits of the lobster [laughter], and after great consideration Congress passed a law appropriating $10,000 for a lobster station.

A Member. A hatchery.

Mr. CANNON. No; a station. They wanted to study the habits of the lobster, I suppose. They may have done some hatching also. In the name of science Congress established that lobster A MEMBER. station. But in that case Congress put an express limitation on the expenditure, providing that the appropriation should be $10,000 and no more. It was alleged, as I recollect, in the hearings that the lobster was a cannibal; that some means must be devised to the lobster was a caminal; that some means must be devised to keep him from eating himself. [Laughter.]

It was said that the lobster was disappearing. Anyhow, the appropriation was made. But some zealous brother, knowing the facility with which people go on, paying no attention to any ordinary limitations, provided that the sum should be $12,500 and no more. Well, what has happened? They bought some land there. They have not yet established the station. [Laughter.] And now they want some more land with a residence on it which cost $6,000, but which they think can be bought for $3,500. Whether the lobsters are to reside in the house I do not know; but I suppose that some of our volunteer scientists will live there. I do not know about that.

But here is the language now, here we are confronted with the proposition to come in and found that lobster station, or "hatchery," and spend $10,000 more for that purpose. He tells us that it can not be done without that expenditure. Well, what says the law? What about the law for the expenditure? We did not give the appropriation because it was not authorized by law. Congress enacts the law, we tell the Commissioner, and although he informs us that he had it in mind to make it a good fish hatchers expended as a lobster station was a consultated. ery as well as a lobster station, we are compelled to tell him that Congress enacts the law and that his mind does not control, or ought not to control, although it seems to do so in fact, because in the establishment of the lobster station there seems to be no law whatever authorizing it. Well, what is the result? Simply that we did not put the provision into the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are various other items kindred to this that we left out of the bill. I will give you an instance of one of them. Under the organic act for the Hawaiian Islands, authority and a provision was made for a fish station for the purpose of studying the habits of the fish living in the waters adjacent the Sandwich Islands. That is all. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BELLAMY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, there is the bald authority in the organic act, which is just like the thousands of things in the acts organizing the Territories, and other things of a similar character. Sometimes, and in some of these cases, it is the duty of the United States as well as its interest to do the work. But it was not called to the attention of Congress as to what the cost would be, or whether it was the sense of Congress to make the appropriation at all. Yea, yea, we are told, without a word of explanation, the Fish Commissioner selects an eminent scientist on the Pacific coast, and how many others I do not know, and they traveled to the Sandwich Islands to study the habits of the fish of that region. and I believe that they have the report about ready to submit-a and I believe that they have the report about ready to submit—a report which will cover a large number of pages.

But the question is, Who paid the expenses? From what fund were they paid? Why from the general appropriation for vessels, maintenance, etc., that is intended to be made by Congress for the existing fish service? But he comes in and wants a supplemental provision in the shape of a deficiency. We say no. He says he wants to send them back to the Sandwich Islands and put them on the Albatross, and let it lie off in the waters of these islands for several months, and for what purpose? Why, Mr.

Chairman, he wants them to stand off the shore 10, 15, or 20 miles and make deep-sea soundings, and also at the same time to study up the habits of the fish of those waters. Now, that is an entirely proper thing, but yet he wants about $10,000, as I recollect it, to do the work with. We held it up and did not put it in the bill. In other words, we are to be taken into the confidence of the Fish Commission and of the public service under the Executive Departments elsewhere, and to know something as to what is to become of the money that is to be expended before we appropriate it. That is the point we make.

Now, we left these items out. We wanted to make further investigation, and we treated the matter, so far as it can be treated, as a proposition that should properly come on the regular deficiency bill if it comes anywhere, and it will be reported later on in the session, after mature consideration.

Now Mr. Chairman, I wish to say merely this in closing: I

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say merely this in closing: I have no malice against the Fish Commissioner. I do not say that he has not been performing his duty as he sees it, but he does not see it in the light that I see it; and as soon as he comes to understand that, as an executive officer of the Government, he should expend the money of Congress, which it sees proper to appropriate, in the manner that Congress has determined it shall be expended and there stop, the better that service will be for all of us; and while it is a most popular service, I wish to call a halt on it. The estimates come in and are considered and passed upon by the proper committee, and then let the service go on accordingly after they shall have made the appropriation.

Now, that is all I have to say. The committee thought it best not to put any of these items in this urgency bill; but let them stand for the present, even until the general deficiency bill comes in, and then, in the meantime, let us make something of an invesin tigation.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment proposed by my colleague from North Carolina will pass the House. I simply rise for the purpose of speaking briefly in behalf of the proposed amendment, and do not desire to debate the matter with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the the matter with the distinguished gentleman from minois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But I am interested in this amendment, Mr. Chairman, not only in behalf of the cause of science, but also somewhat interested personally in the matter, because the county in which this marine laboratory is located is the county of Carteret, which I not only had the honor to represent in the State legislature, but which, after the next general election, will become a part of the Third Congressional district of the State of North Carolina, my district.

Now Mr. Chairman, it is true that the act of the last Congress district of the State of North Carolina, my district.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is true that the act of the last Congress appropriated only $12,500, and this amount at the time was considered sufficient, but it has proven entirely inadequate. The original appropriation was for a marine laboratory to be located at some point in North Carolina, and the town of Beaufort was selected, because, as my colleague has well said, there is no point on the south Atlantic coast, south of Woods Hole, Mass., where there are so many valuable specimens of marine life or so advantageous to the cause and interest of science as this particular locality. As the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] well knows, this marine laboratory is indorsed by all the leading scientists of this country.

The members of the House would be astonished if they could see the indorsements given to this enterprise by the scientific men see the indorsements given to this enterprise by the scientific men see the indorsements given to this enterprise by the scientific men at Yale, at Harvard, at Johns Hopkins, and all the leading universities and colleges of this country. The marine laboratory at Beaufort is therefore valuable to the cause of science. It is absolutely necessary that the buildings should be completed. I know personally, from a visit to the buildings, that they are exposed to the weather, and that unless the Government protects its property there is some likelihood of serious damage being done to it. The site has been purchased; the buildings are partially constructed; the United States must complete them or abandon the enterprise.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says we are going to put an additional appropriation in the bill at the next session; but my colleague appropriation in the bill at the next session; but my colleague and myself insist, on behalf of the people who are interested, and on behalf of the Government of the United States, which is interested in this matter, that these buildings need this appropriation for the purpose of speedy completion, and that the matter is urgent. The Government has appropriated for a fish hatchery at Tupelo, Miss., and for a lobster hatchery on the coast of Maine, and all these enterprises are being pushed to a completion. Let us likewise complete the marine laboratory at Beaufort. This is an urgent matter, and in my opinion this item should be carried in this bill at this session and not wait for the next session to be incorporated into some other bill.

I appeal to the members of the House to pass the amendment

I appeal to the members of the House to pass the amendment and give us this additional appropriation now.

Mr. FLEMING. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman please explain to the House the reasons why the officers in charge of this station exceeded their authority and apparently committed the Government to a twenty-five thousand dollars project under cover of a $12,500 appropriation?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. That I can not say to the gentleman from Georgia. I confess I am not posted on that subject. I can only say that this Government frequently starts upon the construction of buildings and other enterprises, and that the

the construction of buildings and other enterprises, and that the limit of cost is often exceeded.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina

[Mr. SMALL] desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. SMALL. I should like the indulgence of the committee for a moment. I have listened with interest, as I always do, to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Canyoyl in what he has had to say concerning this amendment. CANNON] in what he has had to say concerning this amendment which has been offered, and I am not disposed at this time to take issue with him as to his criticism of the Fish Commission. The point I make is that unless some objection can be made to this particular amendment it ought to be submitted to the committee upon its merits.

Now, there was an inquiry made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Fleming] as to why the Fish Commissioner exceeded the original sum of $12,500 that was appropriated. I have in my hand a copy of the original letter, dated January 19, 1900, from the Commissioner, addressed to the Hon. George C. Perkins, chairman of the Committee on Fisheries of the Senate, in which he uses this language:

Although $25,000 would not be too large a sum for Congress to appropriate for a station of this character, yet in view of the comparatively cheap rates at which materials and labor can be had and the small outlay probably required for the necessary land, the Commission believe that a plain, substantial, and satisfactory station may be established for a smaller sum than is carried by the bill, to wit, $12,500.

And the Commissioner states in the hearing before the committee and in conversation with myself that he was simply mis-taken in his estimate of the cost of the materials and of the other items which entered into the construction and equipment of this items which entered into the construction and equipment of this building.

Now, that is the explanation, and therefore I say that the only error which the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries has committed is an error of judgment. Why, gentlemen of the committee, do we have any urgent deficiency bill at all? Somebody has committed errors of judgment or we would not be called upon to-day to vote appropriations for urgent deficiencies. And this is only one of the necessities which arose before the committee in freeling this urgent deficiency bill framing this urgent deficiency bill framing this urgent denciency bill.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. FLEMING. Will he inform me whether this work for the erection of these buildings was done by Government agents or whether it was done by contractors?

Mr. SMALL. I can not say. My impression, however, is that it was not done by contract.

Mr. FLEMING. I was not going to ask why the contract was made double the amount of the appropriation.

made double the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. SMALL. But the facts are that the original sums appro-Mr. SMALL. But the racts are that the original sums appropriated for this station were not sufficient for its completion and equipment. I do not think, gentlemen of the committee, with all due deference to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the scientific work carried on in this or any other station should be criticised and ridiculed after the manner of the distinguished gentleman. If we should abolish the scientific work in the various departments, we will abolish a large part of the Department of Agriculture because in the many ramifications. the Department of Agriculture, because in the many ramifications of that Department it is peculiarly dominated by scientists who would come under the condemnation of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

But, Mr. Chairman, we have another station of this character at Woods Hole, Mass., and I want to inform gentlemen of the committee that the Government has already expended in the neighborhood of $250,000 for Woods Hole station; and yet, when the additional paltry sum of $12,500 is asked, to make available the biological station in North Carolina, we are confronted by the opposition of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It is proposed that this station shall do similar work as Woods Hole station, except that a hatchery is conducted in connection with the latter station, as I understand. I do not conceive that the objections to this amendment are well founded. The water territory which is intended to be covered and the investigations at on this station up the coast of North Carolina include a greater area than that located at Woods Hole, Mass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair

Mr. SMALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, referring to the lobster hatchery located on the coast of Maine, which I believe the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations voted for, he states that they will be asking a sum in addition to the amount of the original appropriation made. The only questions to be considered, Mr. Chairman, are the merits of these several propositions which came before the House for consideration. I have no desire to take up the time of the committee longer. In conclusion, I submit that the amendment is meritorious. That is the only station of this character upon the south Atlantic coest and it is not proposed that there shall be say. south Atlantic coast, and it is not proposed that there shall be any other. The Government has been liberal toward the Woods Hole station in appropriating from first to last more than $250,000. Now, when only $25,000 is asked for the construction of buildings and the equipment of a station upon the coast of North Carolina, it is only fair that it should be granted. I sincerely hope that the committee will vote for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SMALL. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 61.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, after line 4, insert:
"One-half of the foregoing amounts to meet deficiencies in appropriations on account of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Statue of Rochambeau: For the preparation of a site and the erection of a pedestal for the statue of Rochambeau by Ferdinand Hamar in the city of Washington, said site to be selected on any unoccupied public ground by, and the said pedestal erected under the supervision of, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the chairmen of the Committees on the Library of the Fifty-seventh Congress, and to defray the expenses attending the unveiling of said statue of Rochambeau, $15,000: Provided, That any part of this sum not required for preparation of the site and the erection of said pedestal and for the expenses attending the unveiling of said statue may be used and expended for the completion of said statue and pedestal: And provided further. That said statue shall not be located in the grounds of the Capitol or the Library of Congress.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, there is one item in this bill which must appeal very strongly to every member of this House representing a rural constituency. That portion of the bill purposing to furnish the means for putting into immediate operation 1,800 rural routes, already having the favorable consideration of the Department and only awaiting the passage of this bill to go into effect, must and only awaiting the passage of this office the different must challenge the active support of those members whose people are now suffering from the lack of sufficient mail facilities to meet the ordinary demands of enlarged business and advanced civilization. Members, many of whose constituents must go from one to eight miles for their mails, will be pardoned when they appear overanxious to see this item remain in the bill.

They know what country life means, and they know that nothing contributes so much to any monotony incident to that life as our inability to get a daily mail at our doors, as do our friends in the towns and cities.

It can hardly be possible that a majority of the members of this House can appreciate the true situation as it exists in our Southern States, where the population as it exists in our south-ern States, where the population is sparse, railroads not over-numerous, and roads bad. It is not strange that members repre-senting city districts, where the mail is delivered from three to nine times per day, can hardly realize or believe the assertion that many of our people, doing large business and employing much labor, must send from three and as much as eight miles each day for their mail, furnishing a boy and conveyance, or else do without it trueting to luck to give them a good market when they hand it, trusting to luck to give them a good market when they haul their produce into town. Yet this statement is true, as every Southern member will testify.

To these people, situated thus, a daily mail means something.

It is a blessing. It means the introduction of the world to the farmer, the introduction of the farmer to the world. It means each will better know the other, more thoroughly understand the mutually dependent relation that each bears the other, and more correctly comprehend their rights and relative duties. It means the farmer, for once in his life, will be brought in direct touch with some of the benefits of the Government, and we feel safe in assuring his deepest appreciation, for there is no class more grateful for a benefit, even if it does come as a matter of right and justice, than the American farmer. It means the broadening of his vision, the sharpening of his intellect by contact with other intellects, and his conception of new ideas and new resolves. This, and much more, it means to the farmer to have a mail at his door each day in the week save Sunday. If our Southern farms are becoming depopulated and our farmers becoming townspeople, the causes are not hard to find. Bad roads, low prices, and no postal facilities will drive a man almost anywhere. The tide of population in those sections which have come under my observation has been townward. Nice farm cottages have been given up, and the former occupants are now operatives in some pear-by cotton mill, where their extrainers expected in the total some near-by cotton mill, where their earnings exceed in the total by far their earnings on the farm, and, in addition to this, they are not troubled with miserable roads or the equally miserable, insufficient mail accommodations. In town he finds better wages, better roads, and more mail, and so to town he turns his steps, and valuable farming lands are left to groan and perish under the joint laziness and mismanagement of the ox and negro. Without discussing the dangers and evils arising out of concentrated populations—these being known to everyone—it is the duty of this Congress to remove, as far as possible, every influence conducing to that condition.

When we have fully understood the situation as it is, the necessity for the appropriation in this bill for rural-delivery purposes becomes apparent. There is no deficiency in the general appropriation for rural free delivery, and the reason this amount is urged by this bill grows out of the fact that the full appropriation for this final reason this amount is for this fiscal year can not be reached in time to put on the 1,800 routes now waiting to go into operation as the general appropriafrom now until July 1, when the new appropriation becomes available. The friends of free rural delivery, the patrons along these 1,800 routes, who now have the most limited mail facilities, and the demands of business call for this appropriation, and without delay. We want the routes, and want them at once. have been waiting all our lives for some recognition of our rights under the law, and now that there is some little chance that our waiting has not been in vain we can not submit to hope deferred. It is estimated that it costs $12.50 to every 125 families to get their mail under the old arrangement, and that is a very small estimate, in my judgment. Each route of 1,800 that goes into effect at once will serve, it is judged, 125 families. The exact saving in actual money is easily calculated from these figures, and who more richly deserves this saving than our American farmers who for six years has heard the whispers of "greet prosand who more richly deserves this saving than our American farmers, who for six years has heard the whispers of "great prosperity" but has never seen it? It is not my intention to enter into any defense of the rural free-delivery scheme. It needs no defense save an acquaintance with its workings and its developments. The mere statement of the fact that only five years ago there was only one route in this country, and that now there are over 6,000, serving over 4,000,000 farmers, and an estimated increase by July to 8,000 routes, serving over five and a half million people, is sufficient evidence of its popularity and intrinsic lion people, is sufficient evidence of its popularity and intrinsic merit, without adding to this testimony the action of the several Congresses past increasing each year the appropriations for this purpose and the unstinted indorsements of the Post-Office Department and the enthusiastic recommendations of two Presidents. It is the most popular branch of the postal service to-day, and it deserves to be. In its marvelous development it has been equaled only by the free-delivery service in cities and large towns, and the time will come when the farmer will receive his mail once a day, as he is entitled to receive it, and an unjust and unreasonable discrimination against our country folk will be swept away. Ten years ago the service had few friends, and the Post-Office Department would take no part in trying to give it a fair experiment. How different now! The Congress, the Department, and the President are on their knees to it, and there are a half hundred men all over the country asserting their claims to its "daddyship." I urge this appropriation in the name of the 225,000 farmers who are in need of it and to whom it is due as a matter of right and are in need of it and to whom it is due as a matter of right and not as a matter of favor, and in the name of the thirty-odd million other farmers who, in the nature of things and as a matter of common justice, will eventually get it. Right demands it. The Government owes it, and the time for payment is here. The American farmer is slow to make demands, but when once he makes them, believing in their justness, he is not easily turned aside from them. The revolution in the method of furnishing mail to our country people must go on until each home, each day, is brought in touch with the world. Not until then will the farmer be satisfied! [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY POST.

For the establishment in the vicinity of Manila, P. I., of a military post, including the construction of barracks, quarters for officers, hospital, storehouses, and other buildings, as well as water supply, lighting, sewerage, and drainage, necessary for the accommodation of a garrison of 2 full regiments of infantry, 2 squadrons of cavalry, and 2 batteries of artillery, to be available until expended, $500,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, and Mr. PADGETT rose

Mr. HULL. I think, Mr. Chairman, I will be compelled to make the point of order upon this that it is new legislation.

Mr. CANNON. I think my friend, perhaps, had better let some gentleman on the other side make the point of order. How-

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not lecture his own side for doing right.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will not speak about that matter. I confess the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the proper shelter and received.

For the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. What point?
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that it is new legislation, and if such an amount is necessary let a bill be introduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is the duty of that committee to take care of the army in the Philippines and everywhere, and I venture to say it is patriotic enough to do it. This is simply an indirect effort to carry his point and accomplish that which the gentleman could not accomplish directly. There is no law that authorizes such an expenditure on a general appropriation bill. The gentleman can produce no authority for it. The rules of the House provide that all new legislation such as this shall be regularly introduced, the tendence of the committee and a report made upon it. referred to an appropriate committee, and a report made upon it.

Now, there has been no bill introduced. Certainly, if there was

Now, there has been no bill introduced. Certainly, if there was a demand for such legislation, gentlemen on that side of the House or gentlemen on this side would have introduced a bill, and it would have been referred to the Military Committee. That committee would report upon it, and the House could pass it. If you can evade, Mr. Chairman, the rule which provides that you shall not put new legislation upon general appropriation bills in the manner indicated by this amendment, you break down every safeguard in the rule to protect general appropriation bills from general and new legislation. I submit that under the letter of the law, under the spirit of the rule, this amendment can not be offered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the Revised Statutes, which are fixed law—statutory law—as amended from time to time, create an Army. The Constitution makes the President of the United States Commander in Chief of the Army. His powers are well defined. The Army has to be clothed and armed and sheltered

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let me ask the gentleman, does he pretend that there is a deficiency of $500,000 in the House appropriations or other appropriations for the army in the Philippines, which is a real deficiency that he intends to cure by this amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, so far as deficiencies, so called, are concerned. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Oh, the gentlemen can laugh. This is for an additional appropriation for the current service of this year, generally called a deficiency. It is necessary for the shelter of the army in the Philippines, as your committee is advised after inquiry. The Army exists by law, the President is the Commander in Chief, and this is a bill that under the rules of the House is reported in order. If further legislative authority is required. I call the gentleman's attention to the tive authority is required, I call the gentleman's attention to the so-called Spooner amendment enacted March 2, 1901. I read:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise ordered by Congress, be vested in such person or persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government, and for the maintaining and protecting of the inhabitants of said islands in the free en-joyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will my colleague admit a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If your amendment should be adopted by the committee and passed by the House and become a law, is it the purpose of the Secretary of War to use the $500,000 a law, is it the purpose of the Secretary of War to use the $500,000 to establish a permanent military post in the Philippine Islands? Mr. CANNON. I do not know how the Secretary may use the money, whether he will make permanent tents, whether he will build a post of bamboo on a rock foundation, or what he will do. I have no doubt that he will properly expend this money, so as to efficiently and necessarily house our army in the Philippines, and the law makes it his duty to do so. The army is there under law, and this appropriation is to carry out existing law, and this amendment, in my judgment, frees this bill from the exceedingly technical objection.

amendment, in my judgment, frees this bill from the exceedingly technical objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Are not all rules technical? Mr. CANNON. Oh, all rules may be technical, "for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." [Laughter on the Republican side.] I am after the spirit. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Let us see where the spirit is. Mr. CANNON. We are trying to get rid of the doctrinaires. Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If the Secretary of War is not asking for it for that purpose, how is the gentleman able to tell the committee for what purpose he will use it if the committee adopts the amendment?

the committee for what purpose he will use it if the committee adopts the amendment?

Mr. CANNON. On the face of the amendment and the law it is in order, and free from a point of order as to the propriety of making this amendment. In the event that the point of order is overruled, my good colleague and the gentleman from Tennessee can run and glorify if their judgment tells them so to do.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. The gentleman, it seems to me, should not seek indirectly to accomplish what he confesses he can not do under the rules of the House. Now, when he comes to appealing to this House, on the ground of patriotism, for our old soldiers in the Philippines or elsewhere, he will find just as much patriotism on this side of the House as he will find in his own heart. [Applause on the Democratic side.] cratic side.

Mr. CANNON. In the meantime the soldiers are suffering for shelter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; if they need to be sheltered, but the law provides how they shall be sheltered. Now, if you want to build an Army post in the Philippines—and that is what the gentleman wishes to do by this appropriation—he will not deny it—I want for him to deny it if he will—

Mr. CANNON. Deny what?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That you seek by this appropriation to build an Army post in the Philippines.

Mr. CANNON. I have nothing to do with building an Army post; but I seek, by this appropriation, to provide money to enable the President of the United States to perform his function under the law—not to make the law, except so far as the providing of the money is concerned.

under the law—not to make the law, except so far as the providing of the money is concerned.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman understands that there is no law and no rule of this House under which he can accomplish that which he is seeking to accomplish in this indirect way by this amendment. He seeks to put into the hands of the Secretary of War, to be used in his discretion, $500,000—to do something which the gentleman must admit can not be done by an amendment to this deficiency bill. He seeks to build, with this very money, an Army post in the Philippines. I have asked him to deny that statement if it is not true.

Mr. CANNON. On the contrary, I seek to provide money to be

Mr. CANNON. On the contrary, I seek to provide money to be expended by the President under law.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Do you want to give him $500,000 to expend at his discretion? You would not ask that as the able chairman of the Appropriations Committee—to give the President $500,000 to expend at his discretion. That is not wise

Mr. CANNON. To expend under the law.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Under what law?
Mr. CANNON. I read the gentleman the law—the law creating the Army

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman is correct, the President can take this money and build an Army post in

Mr. CANNON. No; this says in the Philippines.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. He could build it at any other point in the Philippines.
Mr. CANNON. Certainly, he could.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let me ask you this question: Do you deny that your only object in this amendment is to provide $500,000 to the end that the Secretary of War may build an Army post near Manila, in the Philippines? Is not that your

Mr. CANNON. He can build any post that it is necessary for him to build in order to carry out the law and properly shelter

the Army

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This bill is a deficiency bill. It can only provide, under law previously enacted, for de-ficits in the appropriations. In order that this amendment may be in order, the Chair must hold that there is a former law authorizing the expenditure of this money in the construction of an Army post in the Philippines. There is no such law, and the gentleman from Illinois should not seek to do indirectly what he can not do directly.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Tennessee, I presume, and the gentleman from Illinois are both aware that the Secretary of War has submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs estimates, which they are now considering in connection with the Army appropriation bill, for an appropriation of $2,000,000 for Army appropriation bill, for an appropriation of $2,000,000 for Army posts in the Philippines.

Mr. CANNON. That is for next year?

Mr. HAY. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. The gentleman can not contend that that is not for the next fiscal year. This bill is to provide for the current year, which expires June 30 next.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I contend that there is no law authorizing this expenditure. The statement of the gentleman from Illinois that the Army exists, and that this appropriation is for the purpose of taking care of the Army, does not bring the amendment within the rule of the House, with which we are all familiar. It is only where a public improvement is already in progress and where the appropriation proposed is for continuing it that amendments of this kind are ever held to be in order upon an appropriation bill. The Chair is familiar with that rule. I could cite a number of instances where that rule has been sustained, but it is not necessary to take time to do so.

The gentleman from Illinois having failed to accomplish directly what he sought to accomplish, because the provision reported in the bill was obnoxious to the rule, undertakes now to put $500,000 in the hands of the President or the Secretary of War to do what was intended to be done under the provision which has been ruled out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have already placed in the hands of the President sufficient discretion in the Philippine Islands. That portion of the country is now under military rule. I submit that we ought not to go further in the direction of military rule by putting $500,000 in the hands of the President or the Secretary of War to be used, as the gentleman from Illinois says, in his discretion in taking care of the Army. The Military Committee of this House is constituted for the express purpose of taking care of just such measures as this.

As stated by my friend from Virginia [Mr. HAY], a proposition As stated by my friend from virgina [Mr. HAY], a proposition is now pending before that committee to provide money for the building of army posts in the Philippine Islands. If it is necessary to build a post there this year, the Committee on Military Affairs can report a bill for that purpose and get the consideration of it in one hour, as they have done on former occasions, and pass the bill through the House after an hour's debate, if it is pass the bill through the House after an hour's debate, if it is necessary that such a provision should be adopted.

So, Mr. Chairman, there is no occasion, at the very beginning of this session of Congress, for this unusual haste. There is no necessity for this speed and the enactment of such unwise legislation. This is an attempt on the part of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of this House to put an amount of money—one half million dollars—in the hands of the Secretary of War, wise as he may be and patriotic as he may be a safablish. War, wise as he may be, and patriotic as he may be, to establish, in his own discretion, in the Philippine Islands what he calls a "shelter" for our soldiers there.

Now, we all want our soldiers to be properly taken care of. But we have a committee, able, patriotic, thoroughly competent, a committee presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull], able men, competent to report such measures to the House that may be necessary under the circumstances, and I insist that that committee should not abdicate its functions nor any other committee of the House in favor of this great Committee on Appropriations, which is reaching out, gathering in, and bringing within its grasp not only all of the expenditures of the Government, but also all kinds of legislation.

The rules of the House, Mr. Chairman, to which I desire to

The rules of the House, Mr. Chairman, to which I desire to call your attention, provide how these army posts shall be built and how established. I invoke a fair construction of your own rules which exclude this character of appropriations, not only from ordinary bills, but especially from a deficiency bill to which it has no relevancy. I am content that the Chair shall rule upon the question on the statement submitted.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a single word in this connection.

There is no doubt, I think, in the mind of any member of this House that the Appropriations Committee might make such an appropriation if not obnoxious to the rule on new legislation. We have a large number of posts in the Philippine Islands which we have a large number of posts in the Finispine Islands which we acquired from Spain when the treaty was ratified, and we paid over the $20,000.000. Now, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois is put into such shape that will enable it to be applied to the posts already established, and this money expended upon them, it seems to me that it would be in order. I do not see how it could be held otherwise. If it is to be applied to the establishment of an entirely new post by the Secretary of War, by its language it is not in order. But the amendment does not so provide.

But so far as establishing new posts in the island is concerned, which was the original proposition as it appeared in the bill, the rules gave jurisdiction to another committee, and I felt myself constrained to make the remarks I did with regard to it. But when we acquired this territory we acquired certain military posts, and there is no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations, in such a bill as this, would, in my judgment, have the right to bring in the item which has been suggested here in the tions, in such a bill as this, would, in my judgment, have the right to bring in the item which has been suggested here in the amendment as now proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, and that there could be no ground of opposition to it under the rules.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly, with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. HAY. Would not the $500,000 proposed in the amendment be expended for an Army post in the Philippines to be established in the city of Manile?

in the city of Manila?

in the city of Manila?

Mr. HULL. That I can not answer.

Mr. HAY. Well, do not you believe that to be the case?

Mr. HULL. I do not want to go into that question of my belief. But I will say candidly to my friend from Virginia that the expenditure of $2,000,000 to which he referred—that appropriation will not be available until after the beginning of the next fiscal year, and does not apply at all to a deficiency bill.

Mr. HAY. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa if the Committee on Military Affairs could not incorporate into the Army appropriation bill an appropriation of $500,000 for the Army post in question and make it immediately available?

Mr. HULL. I do not think so, if the point of order should be raised, because we have no more jurisdiction over this character of legislation in the Army bill than the Committee on Appropriaof legislation in the Army bill than the Committee on Appropria-tions would have in the deficiency bill.

Mr. HAY. But is it not a fact, and does not the gentleman know it, that time and time again we have made certain items of appropriation immediately available?

Mr. HULL. Only in those cases where the law was explicit, and where there could be no question of the authority of the committee

Mr. CLARK. Could you not bring in a separate bill, with a fair chance to discuss it, making provision for this expenditure?

Mr. HULL. Undoubtedly.
Mr. CLARK. Then why do not you do it?
Mr. HULL. For the simple reason that no such bill has been referred to our committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Secretary of War did not ask for this $500,000 of appropriation for the express purpose of building this post in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. CANNON. The estimate speaks for itself.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, well—

Mr. CANNON. There is such an estimate here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And the Secretary of War appeared before your committee and particularly asked for this specific appropriation for that specific purpose, did he not?
Mr. CANNON. The hearings show that he did.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see if, in a minute or two, we can cut away the underbrush that gentlemen have sought to grow and dispel the fog with which gentlemen have sought to envelop this question.

What is the question at issue on the point of order? We have a rule that prohibits legislation on general appropriation bills and excludes appropriations not provided for by law. It is a very proper rule.

The Committee on Military Affairs is an appropriation committee and frames the regular Army bill for the coming year. The Committee on Appropriations has certain jurisdiction, amongst others the deficiency bill, to gather up all the items that are necessary to be gathered up to carry on the Government service for the remainder of this fiscal year, not next year. For that purpose this bill carries $16,000,000. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Richardson] claims that that is subject to a point of order, because he says that a new military post can not be constructed anywhere in the United States until it is first provided for by independent legislation. For the sake of argument, granted. Now, he says that I am to be censured because I seek to have this appropriation made. Let us see about that.

According to his view the Military Committee would have jurisdiction. They can not report this item on an appropriation bill if it is not in order under existing law. Well, then, what is left? The Military Committee, according to his view, must report a separate bill authorizing the construction of barracks at Manila, at Iloilo, and at every other place, mentioning it specifically, limiting its cost; and when it comes here it goes on the Calmador of this Henry endar of this House.

It is not preferred business. It can not get through this House against a technical objection—and the gentleman seems to abound in technical objections—in less than six weeks or two months; then it will have to go to the Senate. Now, technical objections lie here; but under God's laws in the Philippines the wet season sets in the 1st of June. There is scant time, if this money is to shelter the troops, to appropriate it and get the work done. Oh, he says, let it come in in an orderly way. That means, if he has his way, with technical objections, that there shall be no proper shelter for the troops in the coming wet season. There it is. How do you like the picture?

Now, we reported this provision establishing the post, which might be called a permanment post, at Manila, and we reported it on this bill. The gentleman made the point of order. It was subject to the point of order, according to some of the rulings. The rulings have not been uniform. Under the rulings since 1886 you can build battle ships on a general naval appropriation bill. If you follow the same ruling by parity you can build posts. It is an incident of the service; but the practice has been the other

Now, the gentleman prevails with his point of order. The item goes out, and then I offer this amendment:

For the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $500,000.

If you can not appropriate for that, you can not appropriate for tents. If you can not appropriate for that, you can not appropriate on a deficiency bill to buy guns for the balance of this fiscal year, or for food for the Army, or transportation for the balance of this fiscal year.

The gentleman says there is no law. I pointed out the law, a law organizing the Army, a law making the President the Com-mander in Chief, and I pointed out what is known as the Spooner amendment; and there is law as strong as holy writ, under which this army is there, and defining the duties of the Executive; and this is to furnish the money to carry out the law, and in my judgment it is in order.

There was a decision made substantially along this line by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. I recollect it to be about as follows:

When a coast-survey item was reached, an item that provided for officers to operate the coast-survey ships was held to be subject to a point of order, because the law provided that Navy offi-cers might be detailed. But the Navy officers were not detailed, and here were 14 coast-survey ships in commission, without an officer and without a man, and as an incident to the service, a work in progress, an amendment to provide for the officers and men was held in order.

Now that is all I desire to say, and so far as I am concerned, I am ready for a ruling by the Chair.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The original proposition, Mr. Chairman, was clearly subject to the point of order, and the new proposition made by the chairman of the committee, under the law that he reads, if it was not for the rule would be all right. But his trouble is that he finds law enough to make the appropriation by this House in the Spooner amendment. There is no question this House in the Spooner amendment. There is no question about that, but the rule says you can not do it that way. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. The rule does not say it. The rule says that you shall not make an appropriation without law, and the law exists, as the gentleman himself says. Ergo!

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do admit that under the Spooner amendment there is low authorizing an appropriation. There is no

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do admit that under the Spooner amendment there is law authorizing an appropriation. There is no question about that, and I want to say to the Military Committee when you take up this question you can make this appropriation for one or more military posts. There is no question about that. But here is another proposition for the expenditure of money, and that is upon an appropriation bill—a deficiency bill, where no deficiency exists—and Rule XXI says it can not be done. That is all there is to it. [Applause on the Democratic side, and cries of "Rule!"] of "Rule!"

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the Chair will indulge me a moment, the point in the argument of the gentleman from Illinois was evidently designed to swing the Chair from a correct to an incorrect ruling; and possibly from his great persuasiveness it might have some effect in keeping in check the legitimate conclusion of the Chair on this question that he now doubtless has, in order that one may be reached eventually in favor of the sophistry of the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman originally offered a provision in his bill for a barracks at Manila. At that time the gentleman's tender heart did not yearn in order that he might do something for the proper shelter of the officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, the appropriation to be expended under the discretion of the President tion of the President.

Why is it, Mr. Chairman-I speak as bearing upon the point of order—why is it that the gentleman did not make provision for the proper shelter and protection of these officers and men when he originally drafted his bill? Why is it that the provision comes in now, when this paragraph for the construction of a barracks at Manila goes out on a point of order? The gentleman from Illinois addresses himself to the Chair—he certainly can not be deceived by it: and addresses himself to the House, who certainly can not be misled by it. I suppose beyond both he wishes to carry his appeal to the country, and hopes to mislead it. The gentleman offers his amendment and makes his argument for it against the rules of the House, against proper legislation clear and simple; as a probable basis of his argument and contention he makes it for the shelter and proper care of the officers and soldiers in the Philippine Islands.

The gentleman knows very well, and everybody else knows, Mr. Chairman, that this is not intended for any temporary provision. The gentleman can make no excuse or no explanation for leaving out of his bill a provision which he now offers to put into it if there was a necessity for it. It is simply trying to do by in-direction and duplicity that which he could not do directly and doing it in violation of the rules.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me correct the gentleman in connection with the introduction of the new paragraph by the Committee on Appropriations. There is no doubt about there being authority to make this appropriation, but it is a matter which belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, and when the gentleman charges the chairman with a dereliction of duty in not having introduced it in his original bill, I say that we did not have jurisdiction. We assume this jurisdiction when we make it simply to shelter the troops. We knew when we brought in the original proposition it was subject to the point of order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Now, why offer the shelter and protection over the entire Philippine Islands? No one expects to see it scattered in temporary barracks. Who expects that this will be exceeded for the expectation of the control of the pended for a temporary use or for a temporary purpose before the expiration of this fiscal year? The real object of this, gentlemen, you have discovered, is to start a permanent barracks, to start upon the business of making permanent structures for military purposes in the Philppine Islands, on recommendations made by the Secretary of War, and before the Military Committee can act upon them and bring them to this House, and the coordinate Chamber at the other end of the Capitol can act, there is to be appropriated $500,000 to start upon a permanent structure in Manila. It is not expected to be anywhere else. It is for no other purpose, and it is not suspected that the President or Secretary of War or anybody else would expend this money anywhere else than in Manila, for any other purpose than permanent barracks there. That is contrary to the rules of the House, contrary to all the system and method of legislation for authorizing an Army of the United States, and there is no use trying to gloss it over and smooth it down by the pretense that it is designed to care for suffering soldiers and officers in the Philippine Islands.

Why is the appropriation made in that sort of a way?

have not we an appropriation for a temporary provision, for temhave not we an appropriation for a temporary provision, for temporary shelter, for proper care, temporarily, of the officers and soldiers there, if there is occasion for it? How has the occasion for it arisen so suddenly? What has brought it about? We are told, and told repeatedly, that all the trouble over in the Philippine Islands is about ended, and that the army is being reduced instead of being increased. For these years there has been shelter and protection found for officers and men, in Manila especially, as well as at other points in the Philippine Islands. Why the occasion now of taking care of them? This is not put frankly to the House as it should be.

The gentleman says that in the ordinary course of procedure there can not be action in the House within six weeks. commentary upon the rules which he and those associated with him have crammed down the throats of this House. What a commentary upon the arbitrary provisions in the rules, a denial of the right not only of the individual Representative, but a denial of the right of the House itself to do that which it desires to do and which otherwise it might do unless, perchance, there is a slackening of the reins which are held over the House. The gentleman criticises my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Richardson] for raising this point of order, and says that technical points of order may be raised. The gentleman knows that no matter what great and meritorious questions have been offered in this way. in this House, that when the rules exclude them—the rules that were made to exclude them-even when anyone on this side of the House asks that the arbitrary rules for a time be set aside, that the House rise in its majesty and manhood and overrule its own petty, miserable, insignificant rules in order that it may assert its intellectuality and exercise its judgment, they say, "Oh, yes, let the gentleman introduce a proposition to amend the rules, and let it go to the Committee on Rules; but while we have the rules, let us live up to them."

As far as I am concerned, I am in favor of having the rules applied to gentlemen on the other side as well as being ourselves the victim of them. There is no relaxation of them for our benefit; there is no relaxation of them for the general benefit. The gentleman from Illinois knows that six months is not necessary; he knows there is a provision in these rules by which the Committee on Rules could bring in a rule for the consideration of this or any other measure, limit the time of debate, provide for the time when a vote shall be taken; and he knows that under the whip and spur this resolution, provided it is fathered by the powers that control the other side of the House, could go through the House even before we adjourn, if the gentleman would lay aside this bill and have it done on another bill. So that plea does

The whole matter comes down to this: Here is an attempt by indirection, an attempt by false pretenses, an attempt by concealment and evasion, to get rid of the rules; and, Mr. Chairman, they are calling upon you to forget your knowledge of parliathey are canning upon you to lorget your knowledge of parhamentary law, and to lay aside your sense of fairness and serve as their instrument in breaking down the rules of the House, to enable the gentleman to do, in an unlawful way, under his own rules what, for reasons best known to himself and those associated with him, he is unwilling to attempt in the regular and orderly way. That is all there is of it.

The Chairman has announced that he is ready to rule, and I do not wish to consume the time of the House or delay that ruling. I can not believe the Chairman is prepared to rule any other way than in accordance with parliamentary law and even-handed justice, in accordance with the principles that ought to control and principles that certainly will control unless the gentleman's better judgment has been swerved by the specious plea of the gentleman from Illinois, and unless we are to have rules arbitrary in themselves which it has established, and also convenient methods of cutting and breaking down whenever the gentlemen desire it on the other side.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that so able and fair a Representative on this floor should stand in his place and state that the purpose of the Appropriations Committee and the Secretary of War was to come into this House under cover, clandestinely, and insiduously in an attempt to set up a policy of imperialism or a kingly government, or something of that hind in the Dhillipping. that kind, in the Philippines.

Now, I want to say to my colleague from Missouri that during the hour and a half that this matter was under consideration in committee—and if I were permitted to tell what occurred in the committee room I would like to do so—but I want to say, in jus-tice to the chairman and to the committee and to the Secretary of War-and there were one or two other Democrats on that committee, and I appeal to them for the truth of what I am about to say—that everything on that line was distinctly and closely scanned and investigated, and there was but one purpose on the part of the Secretary of War, so far as we could get at his motives, and God grant I may never go behind a man's avowed motives as my friend from Missouri undertakes to go behind ours in this matter. There was nothing in the purpose of the Secretary of War, so far as we could gather before the committee, save

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would prefer not to do so, but go on,
Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that House Document 94, which is the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting estimates to the House for these barracks—the letter upon which your committee acted in this matter-shows that a permanent barracks was in contem-

Mr LIVINGSTON. Well, the committee acting on this matter did not bring in a provision for a permanent structure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Here is the letter upon which the committee acted

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman knows that the appropriation was not brought into the House with the word "permanent"

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the letter stating the purpose for which the appropriation was asked shows that provision was to be made for a permanent barracks.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why does the gentleman want to go behind the action of the committee, and lugging in some letter of the Secretary of War, construe that as showing the motive of the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because in making appropriation for urgent deficiencies the committee is guided by requests of the heads of the different departments, and does not act upon its own

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman is able to read, and will read the bill as we brought it in, he will see that the word "permanent" was not there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I read the letter upon which the action of the gentleman's committee is taken, and if he will read this letter, as I assumed he had done, but which I see nowhe has not, he will find that every recommendation is for a permanent bar-

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman of course knows a great deal more about the committee and its transactions and its purposes than the committee itself does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am commencing to think I do know more about it than the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have no doubt that you think so.

Now, I want to say that this House and this Congress should do something

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow me one question?
Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes, sir.
Mr. VANDIVER. I call the gentleman's attention to this language as reported in the bill:

For the establishment in the vicinity of Manila, P. I., of a military post, including the construction of barracks, quarters for officers, hospital, storehouses, and other buildings, as well as water supply, lighting, sewerage and drainage, necessary for the accommodation of a garrison of two full regiments of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and two batteries of artillery, to be available until expended, $500,000.

Now, does the gentleman mean to say that the committee did not intend that these structures should be permanent?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The committee meant that just as long as we needed that military post and the protection of the troops at that post so long and no longer should that post continue. We confined ourselves to the necessity of the case.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that a very clear distinction has not been drawn, as it ought to be drawn, between the two questions which have been discussed. One relates tween the two questions which have been discussed. One relates to the merits of the amendment, the wisdom of the House in put-ting such a provision on the bill; the other relates to the point of order whether the amendment offered is in violation of the rules of the House. The first question is for the members of the House to decide, the second for the Chair. It should be borne in mind that this is purely a question of the rules and can in no sense be a partisan issue. Surely no man can be charged with lack of loyalty to his party principles or his party associates if he should happen to differ with them upon a question so abstract and so non-pen to differ with them upon a question so abstract and so non-partisan as a question of parliamentary law addressed to the Chair. The provision originally incorporated by the committee in the bill was clearly in violation of the rules of the House, because it provided for the establishment of an army post which from the context was shown to be intended as a permanent army post and there was no law in existence authorizing it. The gentleman from Illinois now offers an amendment which does not propose to establish an army post. It does not provide that the post shall be permanent; it does not say that one shall be established at all. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If this amendment does not provide that the post shall be permanent, does it provide that it shall be temporary?

Mr. FLEMING. No; it leaves that in the discretion of the President.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed in toto to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. I am going to vote against it. I do not believe that it belongs on this bill, and I should not be willing to support it under any circumstances. should not be willing to support it under any circumstances. I think it bad policy for the Appropriations Committee of the House to go over the heads of the Military Committee which has jurisdiction in this matter. That committee should have brought in the bill itself, and orginated it, if necessary.

But I realize that the Chair, in dealing with the question of the point of order, is not responsible for any dereliction on the part of any committee of the House. We can not hold him responsible, for he has no knowledge of the numbers of the graptlement in the for he has no knowledge of the purposes of the gentleman in presenting an amendment of this character. It is presented under the rules of the House. The question of order is raised upon it, and he must rule, not as to what he believes is the intent of the member who offers the amendment, but as to what the rules of the House require him to do it in the premises.

This simply provides an additional appropriation of $500,000, to be placed in the hands of the President to be expended in his discretion in support of the Army in these distant islands. Now, as I said before, I happen to know, or I believe I know, what the intent is of the gentleman who advocates the expenditure of this money, and I shall vote against the appropriation. But the Chair is not charged with the knowledge of the purposes of any member on the floor in offering an amendment, but has simply a duty to do to determine whether the amendment is in violation of the rules of the House or not in violation.

There is no new legislation in that proposition. There is no violation of the rules of the House any more in this than there would be if the Philippine Islands had never been mentioned to the House and it was asked to appropriate a half million of dollars to be used by the President in his discretion in supporting the Army of the United States wherever it might be. But we must understand that these questions are entirely different, entirely separate. We can not, therefore, under any circumstances, blame the Chair if he rules the amendment to be in order. He has a duty to perform without regard to what may be the intention of the gentleman offering the amendment

That duty is one that we have intrusted to him and which we That duty is one that we have intrusted to him and which we expect him to perform without fear or favor. It seems to me entirely probable that the Chair might hold a private opinion that the proposition should not be placed upon the bill, and yet, although he may vote against it if it came to a vote, would still be compelled to hold it in order. And I submit that it is not fair for the House to hold the occupant of the Chair responsible by condemning him for anything properly done by him in the discharge of the duty which he owes to the House. We put him there to preside, and we should uphold him under the rules in all cases where he exercises his judgment properly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the ruling will be. only desire to say that in my opinion the Chair can properly hold—and under the rule probably would be compelled to hold—that the amendment is in order. I say that, although I shall vote against it for the reasons offered by the gentleman on this side of the House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. FLEMING. Certainly.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to ask the gentleman from

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if, in his opinion, this is a permanent provision for sheltering and protecting our troops in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. FLEMING. I will answer the gentleman candidly, that in my own opinion it is for a permanent shelter; and, as I have already said, I shall vote against the appropriation. But the Chair is not charged with the consideration of that question as to the propriety of the enactment. The only duty he has to perform is to determine whether the amendment is or is not in order under the rules of the House. It is not his duty to inquire into the moto determine whether the amendment is or is not in order under the rules of the House. It is not his duty to inquire into the motive of members who offer these amendments.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Then let me ask the gentleman further, after it was conceded that the other proposition which was on the bill was out of order, would not this be also out of order if it proposes a permanent structure there?

Mr. FLEMING. No, not at all.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Why?

Mr. FLEMING. Because the Chair must rule upon it without

Mr. FLEMING. Because the Chair must rule upon it without reference to the other amendment, which has already been ruled He is like a judge on the bench, and as such must consider judicially these questions.

Mr. DE ARMOND. But the other was conceded to be out of order. Now, if this is a permanent structure, and on that ground the original proposition was stricken from the bill, is not this

Mr. FLEMING. I have already said to the gentleman that I

Mr. FLEMING. I have already said to the gentleman that I believe this is to be a permanent structure. But the gentleman must remember that the President could take the $500,000 appropriated and expend it, in his discretion, in the State of Missouri. He would have the power, I think, to do so.

Mr. VANDIVER. Oh, no.
Mr. FLEMING. Well, I think he could. However, if the language restricts it to the Philippine Islands, waiving that question, he could expend it for any other purpose in the Philippine Islands within the limits of the discretion conferred upon him by the amendment. the amendment

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to ask the gentleman one or two questions. I know he is an authority on parliamentary law, and I know his knowledge of that subject is nearly always used in support of the other side. Therefore I want to ask him a ques-support of the other side. Therefore I want to ask him a question. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FLEMING. The "gentleman from Georgia" does not base his views of parliamentary law upon partisan construction. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is not properly susceptible of partisan construction. I am as good a Democrat as the gentleman from Missouri, but I am able to rise above either Democracy or Republicanism when I come to construe the rules of the House and put myself in the place of the occupant of the chair.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I had no desire, in asking the gentleman a question, to settle any issue as to whether he or I is the better Democrat.

is the better Democrat.

Mr. FLEMING. Well, then, the gentleman should not cast reflections upon my Democracy.

Mr. DE ARMOND. But merely by way of illustrating the different manner and the different purposes for which we use our Democracy [laughter and applause on the Democratic side], I wish to ask the gentleman whether he does not know from the reading of this amendment that it is intended for a permanent structure, $500,000, the same item exactly as the other one which was ruled out.

Mr. FLEMING. I believe it is, and I am going to vote against it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, I ask the gentleman whether he does not know from the reading of it that it is, whether he can draw any other conclusion?

Mr. FLEMING. That is my judgment, and I am going to vote against it

Mr. DE ARMOND. Then I will ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. FLEMING. Yes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If that is true, in what particular does it differ from the other provision, that everybody conceded was contrary to the rule and out of order, and why ought the Chairman to sustain this, when everybody conceded that that had no leg upon which to stand?

Mr. FLEMING. Because the Chairman is not charged with any such knowledge of the purpose at all. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] He is there as a judge to rule upon this question, and to rule upon it in the light of the rules of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow a question.

Mr. FLEMING. Yes; but one at a time. I yielded for the purpose of answering a question of the gentleman from Missouri Mr. DE ARMOND

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Do I understand—
Mr. FLEMING. I wish to understand the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. De Armond], and I yield for that

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. FLEMING. I will answer any question that I am able to answer, in due time.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understand the gentleman yields for another question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to obtain order,

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to obtain order, in order that he may hear the question.

Mr. FLEMING. Yes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman from Georgia and I agree, as I understand him, that this is intended for a permanent structure, the same in substance as the other provision. Now, I ask him, why have we not the right to conclude that the Chairman, in ruling upon this question, will use that ordinary intelligence which we are all confessing to ourselves that we have, and that brings us all to the same conclusion about it? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I have no difficulty in answering that question to my own satisfaction. I say that the occupant of the chair must rule upon this amendment entirely separate and distinct from the first amendment, which he has already ruled upon, and without reference to it. It is none of his business what amendment has been offered and ruled upon heretofore. He must take this amendment and rule upon it by itself, and for the purposes of his ruling must construct it by itself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen on this side of the House who are good Democrats have studied the Constitution and rarely make a mistake in constitutional law. They are well posted upon the history and principles of the party and rarely make a mistake in party history, or any question of that kind, and no member on the Democratic side is better posted or more skillful in using his knowledge then the gootleager from Miscorri [Mr. in using his knowledge than the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]; but this is not the first time that I have seen the gentleman from Missouri make blunders in parliamentary law, about which he seems to know very little. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

This is not the first time. You can take the records of the rulings of occupants of the chair, whether in Committee of the Whole or in the House, and follow them along, and you will find time after time where the gentleman from Missouri has been over-ruled in his construction of parliamentary law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman allow one other inquiry? Mr. FLEMING. Yes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will you not also find when you search those records that every time the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Georgia differed upon a point of parliamen-tary law the gentlemen upon this side of the aisle voted to sus-tain the views which the gentleman from Missouri advocated, tain the views which the gentleman from Missouri advocated, and that the gentleman from Georgia was sustained by the solid vote of the other side of the aisle? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri will search through the records upon this question he will find that every time, if I mistake not, that the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Georgia got upon opposite sides of a parliamentary question the gentleman from Georgia was sustained.

Mr. DE ARMOND. But by the votes of the other side.

Mr. FLEMING. Both by the Chair and by the majority of the

Mr. DE ARMOND. This is a very interesting point, and I wish to ask another question, to make it entirely clear.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield further?

Mr. FLEMING. It is entirely satisfactory to me.
Mr. DE ARMOND. I will ask the gentleman again, because this is history, and the interior matters we want to be entirely accurate, whether it is not true that every time the gentleman from Georgia and I took opposite sides of a parliamentary question he did not take the view which that side took solidly—that is, the view of the Republican side—and whether I did not take the view of this side, the Democratic side, and whether the reason why the gentleman was sustained in his view was because the Republican side, the side with which he voted and acted upon the question, was stronger than the Democratic side, with which I voted and acted?

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is seeking to inject a matter of politics into a question of parliamentary law. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I do not claim to be a leader on the Democratic side. I have never aspired to that position. I simply claim to be a Democrat who has convictions upon certain questions, and who will stand to his convictions; and one of them, as I have often repeated in this House, is that when we place an officer in the chair to preside over our deliberations, every man, whether he be a Democrat or Republican, owes him the proper courtesy to support his rulings when they are him the proper courtesy to support his rulings when they are This I have done; and it ought not to be laid to my blame if the gentleman from Missouri, acting to the contrary, has been wrong.

Mr. PIERCE. Then the Democratic side was wrong.
Mr. FLEMING. You followed other gentlemen, I presume.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Mr. FLEMING. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentle-

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentle-man in what sense this $500,000 appropriation is a deficiency? The language of the amendment—and I call the gentleman's at-tention to it—is, "For the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army."

Now, there must be an appropriation, under some law author-izing it, before a deficiency. There must have been a law for the President to expend money for the shelter and protection of offi-cers and enlisted men before there can be this deficiency. I would like the centleman to explain how there can be a deficiency for it like the gentleman to explain how there can be a deficiency for it if there has been no law.

Mr. FLEMING. I am a little surprised that a gentleman so well posted in parliamentary law as the gentleman from Tennessee should make such a mistake. The rule of the House does not say should make such a mistake. The rule of the House does not say that there shall be no new legislation on an "urgent deficiency" bill nor on any "deficiency" bill. It says there shall not be any new legislation on any "appropriation" bill. It does not matter whether it is an urgent deficiency bill or a deficiency bill, the same rule applies. So I say your emphasis on "urgency" or "deficiency" has got nothing to do with it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It must be a deficiency to be in this bill.

be in this bill.

Mr. FLEMING. That is a mere quibble of words as to the title of the bill. I am speaking of the rule of the House. The rule of the House says that an appropriation bill shall not carry any new legislation, and it does not apply specially to an urgency bill or a deficiency bill.

And, Mr. Chairman, I think that the gentleman from Missouri does me injustice by injecting partisan considerations into matters of this kind. My position has been all along since I have been in of this kind. My position has been all along since I have been in Congress that there are some questions that are party questions, and I have never been found in the wrong place or attitude on any one of them; but there are other questions not party questions—and questions of parliamentary law can not properly be made party questions—and the presiding officer of this House who sits in that chair ought to decide them without reference to party, and when he does so, I believe that good order, good fellowship, and good Democracy is promoted by a man on this side of the House if he honestly thinks the Chair's ruling is correct to so say, and to urge that as a reason for impugning my Democracy is un-My Democracy can not be impugned by that sort of reasoning.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. FLEMING. I had concluded, but I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I would much regret to see this House adjourn with the happy relations between the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Missouri in any way dis-

Mr. FLEMING. I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DE ARMOND. There is no disturbance over here.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I really think the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Georgia misunderstand each other. There is no difference between them as to the point of order. I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that it was his deduction from the reading of the bill, or the amendment, that it was for a permanent appropriation. The difference lies in this: The gentleman from Missouri thinks the Chair is just as capable of taking that view of it as the gentleman from Georgia, while the gentleman from Georgia does not entertain the same opinion. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois no doubt thinks he has said something very witty, and I think his audience has properly applauded him for it. It is a reflection, however, both on the gentleman from Illinois and the applauding audience, because the gentleman has never yet been able to grasp the idea that the presiding officer of the House is not supposed to know or question the purpose of a member in proposing an amendment, and it is none of his business to know. But it is his business to apply the rules to it, just like a judge on the bench when pleadings are brought before him, and it is said that this means pleadings are brought before him, and it is said that this means so and so, the judge has no right to say that the pleading means anything else that is not expressed.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FLEMING. Certainly.

Mr. KLUTTZ. The gentleman likens the Chairman of the House to a judge on the bench. I would like to ask the gentleman if the precedition was striken out because it was the gentleman. man if the proposition was stricken out because it was obnoxious to the rules if the judge upon the bench would not be doing right to consider what the amendment offered in place of it was, and whether that was not the same thing, and that he should take judicial notice of it.

Mr. FLEMING. If it said the same thing in the same language, he could. If it does not, if, as in this amendment, it leaves the discretion in the hands of the President of the United States to spend the money, not on a military post at all, but as he sees fit, then the objection that would have ruled it out in the first instance would not rule it out in the second. The objection made to the original provision was good, but the objection made to the second amendment, in my judgment, is not good.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say that after he has heard the gentleman from Mississippi he would be glad if he might be permitted to rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Flemine] that parliamentary law is not political, but I confess to a strange inability to comprehend that sort of position which is taken by one who says he is opposed to a policy and goes out of his way, in a work of supererogation, as an advocate by speech, in order to help the people in favor of the policy to enact it into law.

I do not understand why he should make himself their lawyer for the proposed dains their releading even if he should agree for the purpose of doing their pleading, even if he should agree that their plea is correct. I do understand why, upon a question of parliamentary law, he should vote his sentiments—if his vote were necessary—but I do not understand why he should become the speaking advocate on the floor of the means whereby the thing to which he is corrected as a law put was the statute back. thing to which he is opposed can be put upon the statute book, and whereby alone it can be put there.

Mr. FLEMING. If I understand the gentleman, he says that a gentleman is excusable for voting, but inexcusable for giving his reasons?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think a gentleman may be excusable for voting, and yet is inexcusable for helping the other excusable for voting, and yet is inexcusable for helping the other side to put a thing through in which he does not believe and which he says he believes detrimental to the public welfare and violative of sound policy. He could content himself with his simple vote, or, better yet, take refuge in silence, which is sometimes golden. But I do not want to argue that.

Mr. Chairman, there is no pretense here that this amendment is offered for the purpose of supplying any existing or expected deficiency in the public service. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

CANNON] in answer to a direct question to that effect, responded that there was no pretense of that sort. The Chair knows that. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a change of existing law for several reasons. There is a present law, there is an existing law governing the organization and maintenance of the Army of the United States, a law passed by Congress, a law specifying the number of officers and men, equipment, amount to be spent, and the manner in which the money shall be expended. No part of that existing law makes provision for the purpose of this amendment, even upon the face of the amendment, leaving out of consideration the apon the face of the amendment, leaving out of consideration the real and confessed purpose of the amendment back of its face.

There is an existing law, and it is an existing law wherein Congress made the appropriations. It is a law that is made by Congress. There is an existing policy to the effect that Congress alone makes appropriations for the maintenance and organization of the Army. Here is absolutely not only a change of law, but a new policy inaugurated—a policy enabling the President to organize the Army and its president. ize, specify, designate expenditures for the Army and its maintenance, and a lump sum given him to use in his discretion.

It is not only a new law, but beyond and above it, an absolutely new policy, even upon the face of it. I do not believe that parliamentary law should be political, but I do believe that unless the Chairman and the other side of this Chamber are political in the consideration of this question of parliamentary law they can not come to the conclusion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is not a change of existing law, and an addition to the existing present Congress-made law, and also to the policy of the country, and therefore out of order on an appro-priation bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

propriations for deficiencies, whether for the military establishment, the naval establishment, the Post-office, or Indian, or whatever purpose, are under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations rather than the general committees that care for the general appropriation bills covering the different departments and subjects.

It is not for the Chair to determine whether a deficiency exists at the present time, or is likely to exist prior to the 1st day of July, the close of the fiscal year, in order to say whether or not the proposed amendment is in order; nor is it for the Chair to say whether or not it is wisdom on the part of the committee or of the House to appropriate large amounts of money in a lump sum, as it is proposed to do in this case. It has been the custom of the House to so appropriate for a great length of time in all sorts of appropriation bills. It is for the Chair to look, it seems to the present occupant of the chair, at the text of the amendment, and not at the purpose of the amendment. That idea of the Chair is strengthened by rulings of former occupants of the chair.

In the last Congress, when the amendment for irrigation was proposed, amendment after amendment was ruled out of order by the then occupant of the chair, the committee understanding all the time that each succeeding amendment was intended for the same purpose as the preceding one was, until finally an amend-ment was proposed in such form that the Chair ruled it in order, holding at that time that it was the text that must govern the Chair, rather than the purpose back of the amendment

It seems to the Chair that the question to be determined here is whether this amendment as it appears, as it reads, regardless of the purpose that may be back of it, is an appropriation provided for by existing law. It is not for the Chair to determine what is the purpose of the amendment. Jefferson in his Manual says: "It is not for the Chair to draw the question of consistence within the vortex of order." And that is this case, as it seems the Chair to determine whether the Chair to determine the Chair to determ to the Chair. But it is for the Chair to determine whether or not there is existing law for the object for which this appropriation is provided or proposed. The Chair finds such existing law in what is known as the Spooner amendment to the last Army appropriation bill, which provides that—

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islahds, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

The Chair, therefore, is inevitably brought to the conclusion that there is existing law for this appropriation and that it is appropriate to make the appropriation upon a deficiency bill. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I appeal from the decision of the Chair; and inasmuch as the Chair has failed thus far to point out the existing law under which the amendment can be regarded as in order, I hope while the appeal is pending we may have the law pointed out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 124, noes 98. Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee and Mr. Cannon were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 110.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let us have a vote on the amendment. Mr. PADGETT. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Government of the United States hereby declares its policy and purpose is to relinquish the sovereignty of the islands of the Philippine Archipelago, acquired under the terms of the treaty of Paris, and to restore the sovereignty thereof to the people of said islands so soon as they shall make manifest their fitness and capacity for self-government.

Mr. CANNON. I make a point of order upon the amendment: First, that it is not germane; second, that it changes existing law; third, that it is idiotic. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. On the first and second grounds assigned by the gentleman from Illinois the Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from

Mr. DE ARMOND. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. DE ARMOND was read, as follows:

Insert between the words "proper" and "shelter" the words "temporary," so as to read "for the proper temporary shelter and protection," etc.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer this for the purpose of making clearer, if it might be clearer, the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois. Of course he intended his amendment as a provision as temporary shelter and protection, but in his hurried writing of his amendment he omitted the word "temporary." [Laughter.] And now my main object is to have the word inserted.

Of course the gentleman's amendment is not designed to provide a permanent structure. Everything that has emanated from the gentleman from Illinois negatives the idea of any such purpose. It is true that he reported an item of $500,000 (and by a strange coincidence, such as we sometimes note, the sum named in this amendment is the same) for permanent barracks at Manila. It is true that he did not make any provision in his bill originally for protection and shelter of officers and soldiers, who, according to information which must have reached him very lately, are now suffering for the need of such provision. Therefore I have no doubt that the gentleman from Illinois, to make clearer his evident meaning, will be glad to welcome this simple amendment making the language of his amendment read "for proper temporary shelter and protection."

porary shelter and protection."

I feel that the gentleman from Illinois, who has so often appealed for help to this side of the House, and who is always glad of the support of this side of the House, which of course he can get when he happens to be right, and who depends on this side for that help under such circumstances, will be exceedingly glad of this little assistance from this side of the Chamber in the emergency which now confronts him. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman I hope the amendment of the

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri will be adopted. I do not think that a provision appropriating this fund for a permanent post should have any place upon a deficiency appropriation bill, nor should it embrace a proposition defining the particular policy of the Government. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be wise to indorse and accept the amendment, because its only effect, if this becomes a law, will be to give temporary shelter to our troops in those islands. I think it makes an appropriation that ought to be made; and with the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri I shall regard most of the objectionable features as removed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a single word, and then, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to have a vote on the amendment. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, because it is not necessary. It is not necessary, first, to work out the best interests of the public service in that way. It would read-if it be inserted where the gentleman proposes to insert his amendment, instead of appropriating proper shelter in the erection of barracks for our troops, it would read "to prepare temporary shelter and protection for them." Now, what is temporary? What does the gentleman mean by his amendment? Does he mean something that is to last for a day or for a month? Does he mean it to last for a year or five years? It is too indefinite to be enacted into law. I believe that under the amendment, as I have drawn it, and under the law as it exists, that the President in his discretion be furnished proper shelter and protection for the officers and en-listed men of the Army of the United States in these islands. If it is proper that this shelter shall have a foundation to rest upon, if it is necessary to drive piles in the swamps upon which to erect the structure, or if it be necessary to make a foundation of any kind upon which to place it, the President has the discretion under this appropriation to make such necessary provision. If it lasts two years it is better than if it lasts but one or two months; if it lasts for five years it is better than if it lasts for two days or for two years; and the amendment, as I have presented it, is in proper shape, and I ask this side of the House, and gentlemen on that side who feel an interest in the matter, to vote down the unnecessary amendment

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman from litinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Most certainly.

Mr. HULL. This is the injecting of an amendment upon an appropriation bill which has never been applied heretofore, I beappropriation bill which has never been appred heretolore, I believe. Now, we appropriated in the Military Committee last year $3,000,000 for barracks and quarters, and there was no appropriation made in that bill which read "for temporary quarters." The appropriation made in this deficiency bill is simply in accordance with the other appropriations made in the military bill, if I understand it, and hence the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri has no place upon it.

Mr. CANNON. And I might add—adopting the suggestion of my friend from Iowa—that the amendment is not in any sense of the word necessary. It has no place here, and is made, in my judgment, because of what has passed in the House during the discussion this afternoon; and from what the gentleman from Missouri has said in this discussion, and from what has been said on that side of the House during the debate, I believe that it is moved in the last resort, if possible, further to prevent the proper appropriation for our Army and proper defense of our flag in the Philippine Islands. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. CANNON. If I can answer the gentleman I will do so;

certainly.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Does the gentleman wish us to understand that he does not know anything of what would be done with the $500,000 which he proposes to appropriate? I understood his re-would like to have him explain, if he can, exactly what he understands is to be done with the money.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman's question. When this appropriation is made, as I believe by a solid Republican yote it will be—and I hope and believe by the votes of many gentlemen on the other side, according to their hearts and judgmentwhen it is made and the money is expended, the law has provided the courts and the accounting officers to settle the accounts, and if it is unlawfully expended the accounts can not be settled. Aye, more, if it is a new provision it must go to the Comptroller of the Treasury for construction before it is expended; and we will remit the question of what the expenditure can be to the dis-cretion of the President and to the judgment of the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield further to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.
Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman from Illinois misunderood me. I asked him a question which he said he would answer if he could, and which I have no doubt he can answer, but which he has not answered. I ask him whether he wishes the House to understand that he does not know what will be done with this money or where it is to be expended?

Mr. CANNON. I have never been in the Philippines. If it is expended it will be expended in the Philippines, under the language of the amountment for the prepare shelter and protection. guage of the amendment, for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States. I am for that. I believe it will be expended for that purpose, and therefore I am for it. Whether there will be stone foundations or whether there will be pile foundations, whether they will use brick for all of it or a brick veneering, or whether they will make it of bamboo, I do not know; but I am satisfied that the President, in the exercise of a sound discretion, will use it according to law for the best interests and welfare of the men there. Now, if that does not answer my friend as he would like to be answered, why, then, I am unable to answer him.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, Mr. Chairman!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I hope there will be an extension of five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman, I think, is preparing to answer my question, not answering it. Are we to understand the gentleman, then, as saying that he does not know whether there are to be stone foundations, or whether piles should be driven into the swamp, or whether tents should be bought or hired, or buildings rented? In other words, that he does not know anything about what should be done or where it should be done?

Mr. CANNON, I rever was in the Philipping.

Mr. CANNON. I never was in the Philippines. Mr. DE ARMOND. I did not ask the gentleman that. I con-

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman when he asks me a question, and he need not answer for me. [Applause on the Republican side.] I never was in the Philippines. I am not an engineer; I am not an expert. I am a member of Congress, helping to make an appropriation under the law, and I think I have patriotism, and therefore I am for building stone foundations, or piles, or brick, or bamboo, according to the best interests of the men who are there, fighting for the American flag, under the law. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman has five minutes and I hope he will answer.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend has another question, I will answer.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No, I only have the same question and the gentleman yet has the answer in his possession, for he has not given it.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I fear that nothing short of Divine power would satisfy the gentleman, and I have not that. Sometimes I think I have a little of the afflatus, you know, but then—

Mr. DE ARMOND. If I thought that Divine power, either original or delegated, was necessary to furnish an answer, of course, I would not address my question to the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter and applause.] I wish to ask the gentleman one other question, and that is, he not knowing anything about what should be done, how he arrived at the conclusion that $500,000 is about the right sum to do it? at the conclusion that $500,000 is about the right sum to do it? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]
Mr. CANNON. I am satisfied from the best estimates we can

Mr. DE ARMOND. Of what?

Mr. CANNON. And from the best inquiries that we can

Mr. DE ARMOND. Of whom? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Hold on a minute-I am satisfied that $500,000 is required to begin this work between now and the commencement of the wet season, the 1st of June.

Mr. DE ARMOND. To begin what?

Mr. CANNON. To begin to prepare this shelter between now and the 1st of June, the beginning of the wet season in the Philippines. Therefore this appropriation is here. I am satisfied, further that when the Arma appropriation bill comes it will come it will be will come it will be will come it will be further, that when the Army appropriation bill comes it will carry a far greater sum than this, to be expended for the coming fiscal a far greater sum than this, to be expended for the coming fiscal year. This is immediate and urgent, and therefore here.

Mr. DE ARMOND. How much, will the gentleman tell us, of this will be expended in Manila and how much in the other parts of the island of Luzon?

Mr. CANNON. Just as much as good sense and patriotism requires. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman answer one further upsetion?

question?

question?

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. DE ARMOND. And that is why he will not on this question employ some of the good sense and patriotism himself instead of remitting the entire duty to the President? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Because the Constitution and the laws that govern everybody that submit to them make the President the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, and the law makes it his duty to assure protection of life and property in the Philippine Islands. It is his duty; not mine. This is mine; that is his. I am doing my duty; I am not going to try to do his. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. I will ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. CANNON. Still one more?

Mr. DE ARMOND. This is very instructive. Is it not the gentleman's duty as chairman of the Committee on Appropriagentleman's duty as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when that committee provides for an appropriation of so large a sum as $500,000, to know something which he can state about what it is for, where it is to be used, and what the result is to be?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not think it is any part of the duty of the Committee on Appropriations, performing the functions remitted to that committee in the preparation of its bills for presentation to the House, to do anything more than to exercise ordinary care and diligence in the preparation of the bills. I never yet have believed it to be my duty to organize myself into a kindergraph school a kindergarten school.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, Mr. Chairman, let me suggest the gentleman could tell us as to what his position in the kindergarten should be. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. CANNON. I should instruct the gentleman from Missouri when he plays to the plaudits of those who always applaud him. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, now a word upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, no, no! The CHAIRMAN. Otherwise the Chair can not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I move, then, to strike out the last word. That will just balance the amendment, and then probably it would be entirely unobjectionable. [Laughter.] I am really disappointed, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois did not promptly rise and support this amendment. I think it is only one of many disappointments.

I had expected the gentleman, especially when he got an extension of time, would answer the question I asked him. I want to be frank with the House. I said I had expected. That is putting it too strong. I had expected that the gentleman would say something which he would think some one would take for an answer; but that he would answer the question I hardly did expect, because to do so would be a departure from the gentleman's general custom. The gentleman talks shout himself not being expect. The gentleman talks about himself not being an expert. In dodging around anything and yet getting to his point the

In dodging around anything and yet getting to his point the gentleman is quite an expert.

Mr. CANNON. I am getting this appropriation.

Mr. DE ARMOND. He says he has not been an expert in this appropriation bill. He has brought in a proposition here to appropriate $500,000 contrary to all the rules of the House and all correct procedure. He has been tolerably expert. I hope the gentleman will not regard this as a beginning—$500,000 as a commencement—to show us what he might do if he really tried. [Laughter.] The gentleman was tolerably expert in doing that. But, Mr. Chairman, I think it would be better for the legislation we put upon the statute books if, instead of being expert, the gentleman would occasionally be candid. I know he frequently tells us how candid he is; but unfortunately that is about all the evidence that we have of it. [Laughter and applause.]

we have of it. [Laughter and applause.]

I sometimes think it would be very much better if the gentleman should do it directly, and that he should announce to the man should do it directly, and that he should announce to the House that he would run over the rules by doing it directly and say, "Now, Mr. Chairman, I know that you can not rule against this point of order; and therefore, after you have sustained the point of order, I shall ask the House, to meet the importance of the situation, to meet the miserable character of the rules, to overturn your ruling, and to do that which I think ought to be done." It would be so much better if the authorized the done." It would be so much better if the gentleman would be more practical in his methods.

Then it would be so novel, such a new exhibition, exhilarating every now and then; and, of course, by direct methods he could accomplish much, just as he does the way it is. But for a beginning the gentleman is doing tolerably well. I hope—shall I hope that the House will not vote down this amendment? I shall not indules in any particular hope about it. I am afraid upon this indulge in any particular hope about it. I am afraid upon this question, as upon one that arose a little while ago, I shall find question, as upon one that arose a little while ago, I shall find myself again in the minority.

No doubt the House understood this to be a temporary arrangement. The gentleman led the House to understand it so, and I thought the Chair understood it so, although I thought he would not. I want to make this an act of good faith, so that there will be no question arise hereafter about the good faith of the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the item. I hope for his sake, I hope in order to leave no question of doubt, this amendment will be adouted. But if the gentleman in his own hard-headedness in hope in order to leave no question of doubt, this amendment will be adopted. But if the gentleman in his own hard-headedness, in his own overconfidence, if the gentleman in his own self-reliance is willing to have the House sit down upon him and put that interpretation upon the bill, of course I am content. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment by the gentleman from Missouri to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illipair.

by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to. Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to come in at the close of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the President shall submit a detailed report to Congress showing how such appropriation of $500,000 has been expended.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily I would not object to any reasonable provision of the kind, but as this whole matter is for delay and embarrassment, I make the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the gentleman can not do it after debate. The gentleman has been debating it. I do

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the gentleman can not do it after debate. The gentleman has been debating it. I do appeal for some rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hold that the gentleman from Illinois was too late in raising the point of order. The gentleman was not debating, he was stating why he raised the point of order. But the Chair is inclined to overrule the point of order, and the Chair does so. [Laughter.] The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. I have always felt, in the interest of good legislation, in the expenditure of the people's money, that an appeal would not fall without effect at the feet of the gentleman from Illinois. I have yet faith in his ability, in his capacity as a legislator, and a man that has more to do with the handling of the public money than any other one man in this House, that in the interest of good legislation when so large a sum of money is put in the hands even of the President of the United States the Congress and the country has a right to know how that money is expended. country has a right to know how that money is expended.

country has a right to know how that money is expended.

Usually, money taken out of the Treasury is upon express appropriation for an express object. Now, according to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, we are not to have any estimates upon which this appropriation is to be made. We have no statement of any bureau or any head of department as to how this money is to be expended. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the committee, has given us no statement as to how the money is to be appropriated, but we simply put a half a million dollars into the hands of the President to be expended in his discretion, and the gentleman objects to our adding to it that the discretion, and the gentleman objects to our adding to it that the President shall tell us, in God's name, how he expended this amount of the people's money. I think, Mr. Chairman, I have said enough.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the fixed law of the land requires that there shall be a statement of receipts and expendi-rres. The constitutional provision requires—

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentle-

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if the same law does not provide that appropriations shall be based on estimates submitted?

Mr. CANNON. Let me state what I was about to. The law is that way now, by constitutional provision, by statute, and no dollar of this money can be expended without its being audited and adjudicated by the auditing officer.

Now, the gentleman may say, Why object to it, as the law is now that way? I object to it because the gentlemen on that side of the House have forced this side of the House, from a partisan standpoint, to make the necessary appropriation to shelter and care for our soldiers in the Philippines. Now, as this is our baby and you did not want it to be born, you shall not help clothe it.

[Laughter.]
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman to concede that he will urge a wrong action upon the House. He says that this is not proper ordinarily, but he will ask the House to follow him in the wrong because there has been some fault upon this side.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I want to read from the Constitution:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

That is the constitutional provision, and I read it to show that That is the constitutional provision, and I read it to show that the gentleman is paltering.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does that part of the Constitution apply in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman also read the law which requires that appropriations shall be based read the law which requires that appropriations shall be based upon estimates?

Mr. CANNON. The Constitution goes everywhere that the flag goes. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] And in going the Constitution makes it our duty to protect life and property in the Philippines, and it makes it our duty and gives us the power to legislate and apply proper laws from year to year according to their condition, and the law that is proper for the gentleman from Mississippi, who lives in one of the United States under the Constitution, may not be proper for a Mohammedan that lives in Mindanao or some other island of the Philippines upon questions of taxation. The Constitution goes there; and it is big enough to go there and work out sensible results through proper legislation, the carping of the gentleman and his party colleagues to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Illinois the other day, when this bill was first brought before the House, to utter in one sentence what he did this evening, that "the Constitution went with the flag of the United States everywhere;" and then I understood him, in a succeeding sentence in the same speech, to say that the Constitution of the United States could "adapt itself to all sorts of conditions everywhere." could "adapt itself to all sorts of conditions everywhere." I do not understand a written constitution of printed and fixed words and letters dancing and jumping and skipping about upon a white page for the purpose of "adapting itself" to conditions which may arise. I understand how somebody—a man, in some capacity, judge or legislator—can mix them and dance them and "adapt" them by constructive legerdemain. And not understanding the position of the gentleman from Illinois, I asked him a moment ago the question whether this particular part of the Constitution which he was reading in support of a proposition which it is just at present to his interest to maintain, viz, that officers must make public reports of expenditures and receipts, applies to the Philippine Islands or not.

It has been adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States, in a most peculiar manner, by a shifting majority of one, that one clause of the Constitution which expressly says that taxes "shall be uniform throughout the United States" does not apply to the Philippines. It seems to me that they come under the head, "throughout the United States." At any rate, the United States has been throughout them. It has been adjudged by this Administration, in its practice, that none of the bill of rights in the Constitution—embracing the first eleven amendments—applies to the Philippines. Then I would like to know, under God and in the name of reason how the contlement of the property of the property of the contlement of the property of the prop and in the name of reason, how the gentleman can stand here and tell us, ex cathedra, that this particular part of the Constitution, quoted by him as a reason to refuse to require by law an account-quoted by him as a reason to refuse to require by law an accounting for public moneys appropriated to be spent in the discretion of the President, does apply to the Philippine Islands.

This is but the beginning of the demonstration of the fact that taking and retaining of these alien and inferior peoples, incapable, in the mass, of self-government, and attempting to "adapt" a written constitution of fixed words and letters to them, will and written constitution of fixed words and letters to them, will and must result in one of two things, either perjury upon the part of those who should be the executive, legislative, or judicial upholders of the fundamental law, in order to "adapt it" to something to which it can not "adapt" itself, because it has neither life nor volition nor motion; or else, upon the other hand, a state of absolutely inefficient and disorderly administration in the Philippines.

No, there is not a man in the United States to-day, not even the contlement from Ulinois himself, upon whose expertness—I started

No, there is not a man in the United States to-day, not even the gentleman from Illinois himself, upon whose expertness—I started to say shiftiness, but I take that word back, because it does not belong to him—upon whose ingenuity, I will say, and long-headed partisan political sagacity I have as much reliance as on anybody's—there is not a man in all the United States to-day who can put his finger upon a single clause of the Constitution of the United States and say, "This clause does or does not extend to the Philippines"

United States and say, "This clause does or does not extend to the Philippines."

They tell us in a sort of general way that the "fundamental principles of government" extend to that portion of the country; but who, in the name of God, is to inform us what the "fundamental principles of government" are? If equality in bearing tax burdens is not one—if trial by jury is not one, if the habeas corpus is not one, if the right of assembling peaceably to petition the Government for redress of grievances is not one—if all the 30 or 40 provisions I might name which have been set aside, practically and administratively, in the Philippines, and the one which has been set aside judicially by the Supreme Court, are none, then, in the name of High Heaven, what part of this miserable document, discredited by you, and dead as far as its capacity to "follow the flag" or anything else into the Philippines is concerned, applies to the population there, or worse than that, more than that, deeper than that, pregnant with more woe for us—what part of it applies not only to the Philippine population, but to our own servants, civil and military, stationed in the Philippine Islands? [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a single sentence and then I will ask for a vote.

will ask for a vote.

The Constitution of the United States was sufficiently adjustable-strong enough, broad enough-to enable 2,000,000 of men for four years to preserve the Union; and it has got a much less job to do in taking care of the Philippines.

A MEMBER. "The bloody shirt!"

A MEMBER. "The bloody shirt!" Mr. CANNON. No "bloody shirt" about it. The work was

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I present resolutions adopted by the National Board of Trade, now in session in the city of Washington, favoring the restoration of the American merchant marine. I suggest that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1902.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1902.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The National Board of Trade at a meeting held this day unanimously adopted the following resolutions on the restoration of the American merchant marine, and instructed the officers of the association to transmit the chant marine, and instructed the officers of the association to transmit the same to Congress:

Resolved, That the recent large accessions to the domain of the United States have opened up to our citizens new opportunities for enterprise; that these new conditions and our rapidly increasing export trade render more important than ever before the development of our merchant marine engaged in foreign commerce.

Resolved, That the development of a large merchant marine is an imperative necessity to our nation, in order that the efficiency of our growing Navy, of which the merchant marine is a valuable and indispensable auxiliary in the time of war, be properly maintained, and to keep pace with the demands of a rapidly enlarging commerce and to meet the requirements of our new possessions.

Resolved, That the National Board of Trade recommends to Congress the immediate consideration and passage of such necessary legislation as will tend to encourage and promote the growth and development of a merchant marine commensurate with the needs of the nation and as will give to all American citizens equal opportunity for building ships and competing for the carrying trade of the world and safeguarding to them the benefits which such legislation aims to secure. tion aims to secure.

ADAM SPEARE. Vice-President, Acting Chairman, J. P. TUCKER, Secretary

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I present three numerously signed petitions in favor of reciprocity with the Dominion of Canada. I wish merely to state that the first petition is signed by Hon. Harry G. Sargent, mayor of the city of Concord, N. H., and 258 other citizens of that city. The second petition is signed by Edward Joslin and 175 other citizens of Keene, N. H., and the third is signed by the Cocheco Manufacturing Company and Hon. A.

G. Whittemore, mayor, and 67 other citizens of the city of Dover.

I have also a personal letter from the Boston Chamber of Commerce upon the same subject. I move that the letter and accompanying petitions be referred to the Committee on Relations with Canada.

The motion was accord to

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I present a collection of like petitions from business men of Boston, Worcester, and about twenty manufacturing cities and towns of Massachusetts. I desire to present them for like reference.

I should like to be permitted to observe to these very eminent I should like to be permitted to observe to these very eminent citizens that their request, as it seems to me, is worthy of the profoundest deference. They speak of matters of which they know and in which they have a personal interest, and what they say should not be lightly disregarded by the law-making power of the Government. But I wish they would consider whether the sending of numerous petitions to the treaty-making branch of Congress to make a treaty which, in the first place, we can not negotiate, but which must be negotiated by the Executive, and, in the next place, which petitions are known to the other party to the bargain, is, on the whole, a fashion of making bargains which has commended itself to the New England intelligence in the past.

When a farmer or merchant or manufacturer has something to swap, I do not think he ordinarily advertises in the newspapers that he has instructed his agent to make the bargain at all events, and he has instructed his agent to make the bargain at all events, and has given notice that if the agent does not make a bargain he shall be disgraced and discarded hereafter. That would seem to give an advantage to the other party to the bargain, which we in Yankeedom do not ordinarily like to give. Now, suppose the Canadians, who look out pretty sharply for their side of the bargain, should say to my honorable friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Fairbanks], if he should be, as he has been lately, charged with the side of the United States in such negotiation, "You have to come to our terms; there is an immense public clamor behind you; your constituents told you not to come home without a bargain your constituents told you not to come home without a bargain with us." Whether that would help him, he can judge better than I can. But I wish our very worthy and intelligent gentlemen who are sending these petitions would take that point into consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Relations with Canada.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of Local Union No. 760, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Melrose, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction of war vessels in the navy-yards of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 39) to correct the military record William B. Thompson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HEITFELD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1187) granting to the State of Idaho 50,000 acres of land to aid in the continuation, enlargement, and maintenance of the Idaho State Soldiers and Sailors' Home, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2848) for the establishment of a subport of entry at Naco, Ariz., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TURNER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the injurt resolution (S. R. 29) recognizing the able was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 39) recognizing the able and gallant services of Capt. Francis Tuttle, Revenue-Cutter Service, his officers, and men, of the Bear; also the heroic services of Lieuts. David H. Jarvis, Ellsworth P. Bertholf, and Dr. Samuel J. Call, composing the overland expedition to Point Barrow, Arctic Ocean, for the relief of imperiled whalers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2479) to facilitate the procurement of statistics of trade between the United States and noncontiguous territory over which it exercises control, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States transmitting a report by the Secretary of State relative to the claim of William Hardman for property destroyed at Siboney, Cuba, July 12, 1898, submitted a report thereon, recommending that no action be taken on the claim, and asked that the committee be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the United States consul at Lyons, France, from $2,500 to $3,000, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying letter from the Secretary of State, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (S. 634) to apply a portion of the proceeds of the sale of public lands to the endowment, support, and maintenance of schools or departments of mining and metallurgy in the several States and Territories in connection with the col-leges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I wish to make a remark touching the bill just reported by the Senator from West Virginia. I desire to state that as the bill provides for an appropriation of public lands I think it should have gone to the Committee on Public Lands instead of the Committee on Mines and Mining. I enter no objection to receiving the report, but I merely wish to go on record as attempting at least to sustain the integrity of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEWART. The Committee on Public Lands will, I Mr. STEWART. The Committee on Public Lands will, I think, extend its jurisdiction sufficiently when it takes in irrigation and practically abolishes the Committee on the Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The bill to which the Senator from Nevada refers likewise appropriates public lands, and that is why the bill went to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill reported by the Senator from West Virginia will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 258) providing additional funds for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at Browns Point, on Commencement Bay, State of Washington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3128) to establish a fog signal and a keeper's dwelling at Piedras Blancas, California; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2448) to establish a light and fog signal at Point Buchon, San Luis Obispo County, Cal., submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BATE. I submit, from the Committee on Military Affairs, a report to accompany the bill (S. 218) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Elias B. Bell, heretofore reported by me and passed by the Senate a few days ago. I ask that the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed under the rule.

LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. RAWLINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by himself on the 8th instant, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; which was agreed to:

Contingent Expenses of the Senate; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs is hereby instructed to make inquiry into and report to the Senate upon the following matters:

First. What, if any, title the Indians have to the valuable minerals within their reservations; and what, if any, authority they have to make leases thereof, or in any manner dispose of the same; and what authority, if any, the Secretary of the Interior has to approve such leases.

Second. What leases, if any, have been made by Indians within any reservation; and what, if any, such leases have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and what, if any, such leases are now in contemplation or under consideration for approval or disapproval.

Third. What methods have been employed to obtain the consent of the Indians to such leases and the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, and what companies have been organized and combinations formed to obtain such leases, where have the organizations taken place, who are the stockholders and officers thereof, and whether any persons connected with Congress or the Government of the United States, or holding offices thereunder, have been or now are interested in or engaged in the promotion of such companies or combinations in obtaining leases for mineral lands within Indian reservations.

And said committee is authorized, for the purpose of making a full investigation of the foregoing matters, to send for papers and to summon and examine witnesses, and the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSENGERS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was re-ferred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. Platt of New York on the 22d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be authorized to appoint a messenger, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided for by law.

REPORT OF BRITISH ARMY TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask for a reprint of Senate Document No. 210, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, being extracts from the annual report of the British Army Temperance Association, etc. As there is a great call for this document and it is inexpensive, I ask that 2,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to oppose the motion, but I wish to say that the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], at the head of the minority of the Committee on the Philippines, in charge of the minority substitute for the Philippine bill, noti-fied me this morning that Senators on the other side are not prepared to go on to-day, and he asked me if I would be willing to allow the matter to go over until Monday. I am glad to agree to the wishes of the Senators in the minority, and I shall be very happy to let the Philippines bill stand over until Monday. But the Senator from Utah assures me the opponents of the bill will be ready to proceed on Monday, and after that day I shall feel it to be my duty, and I give notice, to press the bill for action before the Senate, and I hope the debate will then continue without interruption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMIRAL WINFIELD SCOTT SCHLEY.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I offer a concurrent resolution and ask to have it read for information. I desire to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the thanks of Congress be hereby tendered to Admiral Winfield Scott Schley for his brave and able conduct while in command of the American fleet at the victorious battle of Santiago.

Resolved further. That a sword be presented to him by the Secretary of the Navy of the United States, and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this resolution will be read the tion, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be struck bronze medals commemorating the battle of Santiago and distribute the same to the officers and men under command of Schley during said battle of Santiago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution calls for an appropriation, and it must be a joint resolution. The Senate can not appropriate money by a simple resolution.

Mr. MASON. It is by its terms a joint resolution. It is headed a concurrent resolution. I ask unanimous consent to correct a word in the resolution. I ask thanhmous consent to correct a word in the resolution clause, so as to make it a joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. The Senator had better send it to the committee.

Mr. MASON. Without objection, I should like to change it, if the Senator will yield. It provides for the concurrence of the House, and it is a joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would not make it a joint resolution.

Mr. MASON. I will say to the Senate that it is just a copy, practically, of the resolution passed for Admiral Dewey, and which was unanimously passed. I do not care to discuss the resolution. I do not suppose it is necessary that it shall go to a committee, inasmuch as the matter has been fully discussed in the public prints and among the people generally. I hope there will be no objection to its immediate consideration.

Mr. HALE. I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. Let it go over. Of course it is a matter which in-

Mr. HALE. Let it go over. Of course it is a matter which involves a great controversy.

Mr. MASON. I can not hear the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I have asked that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine objects to the present consideration of the resolution. The Chair will state that it is not the ordinary resolution, which goes over under the rule, but it is a joint resolution proposing to appropriate

Mr. SPOONER. It goes to a committee, does it not?
Mr. HALE. Let it be read.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a Senate resolution.
Mr. HALE. Let it be read. My attention was diverted when it was read before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read as a joint reso-

The joint resolution (S. R. 44) tendering the thanks of Congress to Admiral Winfield Scott Schley, and for other purposes, was read the first time at length. Mr. HALE. Mr. President, like any joint resolution or like a bill, it goes to a committee, as a matter of course.

Mr. MASON. It goes to a committee, as a matter of course, unless unanimous consent is given for its consideration.

Mr. HALE. I must object.
Mr. MASON. I have asked unanimous consent, and I have so far heard no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MASON. I did not so understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, as a matter of course its second reading can not be had to-day. Does the Senator from Maine move its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. HALE. That is where it naturally would go, Mr. Presi-

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I do not see that it is necessary to refer this little simple statement of a historical fact which has been passed upon by everybody in the United States. If under the rules it must go over, it will be just as safe in the hands of the Senate as in the hands of the committee. I have no desire to ask anything out of the usual form, but I think under the rules it can be read a second time and it can be passed. I shall vote against its reference to a committee. I should like to have it remain where it is. I should like to have the privilege of calling it up under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state what he thinks is the parliamentary position of the joint resolution. It has had its first reading. It can not have its second reading on the same day without unanimous consent. That consent has been asked and objection has been made. Nor parliamentarily can it be referred to a committee until it has had its second reading. Therefore the joint resolution will go over until the next legislative day, when the motion to refer will clearly be in order. Mr. HALE. I do not object to its second reading.

Mr. MASON. I ask unanimous consent for the second reading to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the second reading? The Chair hears none, and without objection the joint resolution will be read the second time.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title.

Mr. HALE. I move to refer the joint resolution to the Com-

Mr. MASON. On that question I simply desire to say that I hope it will not be referred to any committee. I will say to the Senator from Maine that this is a copy, in substance if not exactly, of the provision in what was known as the Dewey resolution. I do not wish to hurry matters unnecessarily, but every Senator here knows whether he is going to vote for the resolution or not I hope it will not be referred to any committee, but that it will stand over for action by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

STENOGRAPHERS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings and testimony before that committee on subjects referred to it, the expenses thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings before that committee, and that he be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the Senate what, if any, of the public lands have been withdrawn from disposition under the settlement or other laws by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and what, if any, authority of law exists for such order of withdrawal.

THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That 300 copies of Senate Report No. 172, being the report on the bill to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, be printed for the use of the Committee on Commerce.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. HALE. . I ask for the adoption of two resolutions which affect the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, about to come over from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be re-

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims not heretofore reported to Congress at the present session.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases requiring an appropriation by Congress and not heretofore reported at this session.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 22d instant approved and signed the act (S. 2044) to increase the amount of the official bond to be furnished by the United States marshal for the district of Alaska in certain cases.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanying the Commercial Relations of the United States for the year 1901, being the annual and other reports of consular and diplomatic officers upon the industries and commerce of foreign countries. In view of the importance of these reports to our business interests, I approve the recommendation of the Secretary of State that Congress authorize the printing of an edition of 10,000 copies of the summary, entitled "Review of the World's Commerce," and of 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations (including this summary), to be distributed by the Department of State.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, Washington, January 23, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message and accompany ing letter from the Secretary of State will be printed and referred to the Committee on Printing. The manuscript accompanying the same, according to the usual custom, has already been sent to the Public Printer.

DEATH SENTENCE OF COMMANDANT SCHEEPERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Telles], which will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is announced that sentence of death has been passed upon Commandant Scheepers, of the Orange Free State army, now a prisoner of war in the hands of the British forces in South Africa; and

Whereas it is known that said Commandant Scheepers was captured while lying sick and wounded in hospital, such capture being in violation of articles 1 and 5 of the Geneva Convention; and

Whereas his execution by the British authorities will lead to acts of retaliation and reprisal: Be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President request the Government of Great Britain to set aside, in the interest of humanity, such sentence of death, and accord to Commandant Scheepers the privileges and immunities guaranteed under the Geneva Convention

Mr. TELLER, Mr. President I introduced that resolution

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I introduced that resolution yesterday because certain parties interested called my attention to the fact that the execution of the officer named would be in violation of the first and fifth articles of the Convention of Geneva, to which our Government was a party.

Soon after the introduction of the resolution and the few remarks I made regarding it I was notified by the agent of the Associated Press at New York as follows:

NEW YORK, January 22, 1902.

It has just been discovered that through a cable error an Associated Press dispatch announced that the death sentence upon Commandant Scheepers, of the Boer army, had been confirmed by General Kitchener, and that he would be executed next Saturday. The fact is that he was executed on last Saturday, January 18.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

So it appears that this officer has been executed.

Mr. President, since I introduced the resolution, not publicly, but privately to me, several Senators have criticised the introduction of the resolution, and from their standpoint I suppose it was a proper criticism.

I have been careful about the introduction of resolutions, especially those of an international character. It was said to me yesterday by one or two Senators that it would be very offensive for us to interfere in a matter of that kind. I want to say, Mr. President, that if the Geneva convention means anything at all, it means that in just such a case as this the world has stipulated that we may intervene. The Geneva convention, the act of 1864, to which we acceded in 1882, comprised practically all the Christian nations of the world and included also one or two Asiatic nations. It was stipulated there in unquestionable terms that in just such a case as this is asserted to be there shall be no capture, and if the British army have captured this Boer officer under the conditions that we are informed, then by the terms of that convention Great Britain is guilty of a vile assassination, and to say that the President of the United States can not at such a time intervene and enter his protest is to say that the convention of 1864 and the adhesion to it by our Government and other Governments is a simple farce. It is the duty of every nation that has subscribed to it, whenever they see it is about to be violated, to enter their protest, and it is no cause of complaint for Great Britain or any other nation if protest is made when they are proceeding to violate the provisions of that convention.

Mr. President, I believe I know, after a somewhat extensive public service, what is due by this nation to every other nation in the world, and I believe I would be the last person here to propose entering into any hasty or improper declaration on our part. But it comes to us in the most positive terms by cablegrams from Europe that this man was taken either from a hospital or from a private house where he lay a wounded soldier, and in either case, if Great Britain has seized him as a prisoner and has executed him to be a soldier of the soldier. cuted him, I repeat it is a vile assassination and not an execution.

Mr. President, I desire to read the first article of the Geneva convention, which I repeat has been subscribed to by the civilized Christian world, and, in addition, by Persia and one or two of the other Asiatic countries. It has been recognized as a correct and proper principle for the conduct of war in these days of civilization and humanity. Article I provides:

ARTICLE I. Ambulances and military hospitals shall be acknowledged to be neuter, and, as such, shall be protected and respected by belligerents so long as any sick or wounded may be therein.

Such neutrality shall cease if the ambulances or hospitals should be held by a military force.

Article I provides:

Article V provides: ART. V. Inhabitants of the country who may bring help to the wounded shall be respected, and shall remain free. The generals of the belligerent powers shall make it their care to inform the inhabitants of the appeal addressed to their humanity, and of the neutrality which will be the consequence of it.

of it.

Any wounded man entertained and taken care of in a house shall be considered as a protection thereto. Any inhabitant who shall have entertained wounded men in his house shall be exempted from the quartering of troops, as well as from a part of the contributions of war which may be imposed.

Mr. President, those are the rules which govern war among the Christian people of this world. They are the rules which the Czar of Russia would respect; they are the rules which half-civilized Turkey would respect; they are the rules which half-civilized Persia would respect; they are the rules, Mr. President, which the world respects.

It is possible that we are mistaken as to the facts, but if the facts as alleged by the cablegrams from Europe be true—and we have a right to suppose them to be true—I repeat it was a case for intervention, and it was the business of this Government of ours, when the cable informed us that such were the facts, to at least ascertained from Great Britain if they were true; and if they were, as the cables indicated, then it was the business of this Government to enter its protest.

Are we so pusillanimous, are we so afraid of wounding the sensibilities of any government that is a party to this compact, that we dare not speak in manly terms and insist that its provisions shall be applied to all peoples? If there was any reason why the American people should have, through their representatives, entered a protest where the principles of international law and the rules of humanity were about to be violated, it is because we saw that great power, with an army greater in number than the saw that great power, with an army greater in number than the entire population of the Transvaal, attempting to destroy two small republics. If they have told the truth in their publications, Mr. President, they have within the last year slaughtered more Boers than the British Government were willing to admit were in the Boer army one year ago.

I do not intend to discuss the Boer question; but independent of it, if the Boers were in the wrong—which I do not believe—it was the duty of this Government, if the facts had been as reported to us, to have entered its protest, and Great Britain could not have complained if we had entered it. Under like circumstances, if we had been thus transgressing the rules we had agreed to abide by, it would have been the duty of Great Britain, nay, more, it would have been the duty of half-civilized Turkey and Persia to would have been the duty of half-civilized Turkey and Persia to have called us to account and to have entered their protest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator desire done with the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution be again read.

Mr. TELLER. The resolution may, of course, be indefinitely postponed, because this man has already been executed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be postponed indefinitely.

DISTRICT JURIES AND OFFICIALS.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask leave out of order to submit a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received in the absence of objection.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, to report a bill to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901.

The bill (S. 3199) to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, was read twice by its title.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration and passage of that bill. I should like to state briefly the reasons why I do so.

briefly the reasons why I do so.

It includes the power in the court to draw a grand jury which, by reason of the defect in the code we passed last winter, can not now be done until April. The bill also includes the power to provide juries for the two police courts. The district attorney came to see me with a message from the court, asking me to urge, if I could urge, the immediate passage of the bill. There are now 450 persons in the jail, held upon slight offenses, who are entitled to speedy examination before a lawful grand jury, and speedy trial before the two police-court juries.

The only other feature is a clause certifying that by the passage

The only other feature is a clause certifying that by the passage of the code Congress did not intend to terminate the existing officers in their continuing terms, but that as they were appointed until their terms expired they shall so serve.

That is the whole bill. I therefore ask for its immediate con-

That is the whole bill. I therefore ask for its immediate consideration, and I hope I may get unanimous consent for its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCoMAS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill proported by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. tion of the bill reported by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 204 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "one" in the second line thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two;" also by adding to said section the following:

"Provided, That immediately upon the approval of this amendatory act it shall be the duty of said clerk to proceed to break the seal and to draw from the said box the names of 23 persons to serve as grand jurrors in said criminal courts whose term of service shall terminate on the Monday preceding the first Tuesday of April, 1902; and at the same time it shall likewise be the duty of said clerk to draw from said box the names of 25 persons for service as jurors in the police court of the District of Columbia and to certify the same to the said police court, and the term of service of said jurors so drawn shall terminate on the last Saturday of the January, 1902, jury term of said police court. All provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia' relating to the grand jury and the police court juries shall apply respectively to the juries drawn under the provisions hereof."

Sec. 2. That section 1640 of the aforesaid act be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to said section the following:

"Nor shall the provisions of chapter 60 of this code nor any other provisions thereof in any manner affect the term, tenure, or compensation of any person filling any office or appointment under laws existing prior to its passage, but such persons shall continue in the exercise of the duties of such office, according to their respective commissions and appointments, except as is otherwise provided in said code."

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand that the bill simply provides for an emergency grand jury until one can be drawn under the general law?

Mr. McCOMAS. That is right.
Mr. COCKRELL. And then have petit juries to try cases until such juries can be drawn according to the provisions of the new code?

Mr. McCOMAS. That is precisely what it is.
Mr. COCKRELL. I noticed that there was some trouble over the question of juries for the police courts, and the matter has gone to a higher court.

Mr. McCOMAS. It has, and it has been argued before the court of appeals whether existing indictments and convictions now, under a resolution passed on the 8th of January, are effective or not. This bill removes those doubts, and in addition to that simply allows the officers to serve out their terms. They have been appointed for various terms.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill ought to pass, and I hope it will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time,

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce, and that it be considered without the limitation of the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the department of commerce bill, and that the five-minute limitation of debate be removed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of com-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr.

QUARLES].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is that amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, on page 4 of the printed bill, strike out all after the words "Statistics and" down to and including the words "United States," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the secretary of commerce shall have complete control of the work of gathering and distributing statistical information naturally relating to the subjects confided to his department; and to this end said secretary shall have power to employ any or either of the said bureaus and to rearrange such statistical work and to distribute or consolidate the same as may be deemed desirable in the public interest; and said secretary shall also have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for statistical data and results obtained by them; and said secretary of commerce may collate, arrange, and publish such statistical information so obtained in such manner as to him may seem wise.

Mr. NELSON. Owing to the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell], by which the phrase-ology has been changed, the amendment would properly come in after the words "assistant and," in line 7, on page 4, of the last print of the bill. It is intended to take the place of the words in brackets, which are proposed to be stricken out. I move to amend the amendment so that it will come in at the place I have indi-

Mr. HALE. I suppose I have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], if he has risen to this amendment, to the fact that the printer undoubtedly made a mistake and included in the words to be stricken out the word "and" in line 7. The word "and" should not have been stricken out, but should stand there, and the Senator from Minnesota suggests that this proposed amendment follow the word "and."
Mr. HALE. In line 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 7.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the words and lines that are inclosed in brackets on page 4?
Mr. NELSON. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], which is the pending amendment, is not additional to that, but is to be substituted for the words in brackets.

Mr. HALE. That puts it in the right parliamentary attitude.

Mr. NELSON. Yes. Mr. HALE. Afterwards the Senator proposed the restoration of the Census Bureau to this bill by a vote in the Senate on the of the Census Bureau to this bill by a vote in the Senate on the proposition to strike it out, as I understand.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes; or by a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HALE. Supposing that is not done; supposing that the Senate adheres to its previous vote to strike out the Census Bureau from the provisions of this bill; would the amendment the Senator is now urging apply?

Mr. QUARLES. I think it a very valuable addition to the bill, even though the census were to remain out of the new department; although, as I stated yesterday, my object was primarily to have the Census Bureau restored to the department of commerce. Then this general supervising power will be extended over it; but I think it a very valuable provision even if the census be stricken

Mr. HALE. That is, there will be enough left in the bill to make the provision valuable, even if the Census Bureau is not in it?
Mr. QUARLES. Yes.
Mr. HALE. Though it would not be nearly as much so as if

Mr. HALE. Though it would not be nearly as much so as if the Census Bureau were left in?

Mr. QUARLES. I think the Senator is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] accept the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] that this amendment come in after the word "and," in line 7, on page 4, section 4?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly, Mr. President. I think that is right

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, in reference to this bill, the great leader from Iowa [Mr. Allison] gave us notice yesterday that we ought to proceed with caution. The amendment which I have offered is to strike out, in line 18, on page 3, section 4, of the bill the words "the Department of Labor."

The Department of Labor, according to the testimony of Sena-tors who have been here a long time and who are perfectly familiar with the workings of the departments and bureaus, has done and is now doing a great work. I am not very familiar with the workings of that Department; but according to my information it is a very useful Department of the Government, and has already contributed very largely to the work for which it was designed. It is in a very fortunate situation if the law is allowed to stand as it is. It is not an executive department, but it is simply a department under the general administrative control of the President. It is not directly under the control of any executive department at this time, and, according to my best thought about it, it ought not to be.

The Department of Labor was organized at the earnest solicita-tion of those who are principally interested in it. We know that tion of those who are principally interested in it. We know that that is a very extensive element in this country, and it ought to be treated with the consideration which it deserves. Besides that, Mr. President, legislators are bound to respect even the prejudices of a whole community of people; they are bound to respect them even if they are simply prejudices; and one of the great prejudices which exists in this country is against putting labor under the control of capital.

It seems that in many respects what I call prejudice may be something that is well founded. It may be that it has gone to something that is well founded. It may be that it has gone to great excesses; but this Department of Labor has been one of the favorite ideas with a large part of the people of this country for many years. I suggest that, as we are creating a new department, a department of commerce—it might just as well have been called a department of trade—it would be well enough, in fact the best thing that could be done, to leave the Department of Labor to its well working as it is.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, without going into any extended discussion on the subject-matter of this amendment, I desire to say that there are one or two fundamental reasons and grounds.

say that there are one or two fundamental reasons and grounds which actuated the Committee on Commerce to attach the Department of Labor to the department of commerce. First, we believe that for the proper and due administration of government every bureau of the public service, as far as possible, should be attached to a responsible executive department—an executive department whose head is one of the President's advisers and who is in torch with the countries the Commerce of the Commerce. is in touch with the executive department of the Government. We do not intend by this amendment to reflect in the least upon the character of the present head of the Department of Labor. He is a very able man, but he will not always be with us.

We are liable to have men in the future not so able and so good as he is, and it is altogether safer for the public service to have a division or a bureau of this kind under some responsible executive department. As it is now, we have this and one or two other cases where we have independent bureaus or divisions. No matter whether you call them departments or not, they are really bureaus, because they are not Executive Departments. They occupy a sort of irresponsible position; they are a law unto them selves; they are governed by Congressional legislation, like other departments, but they are in no direct touch with the head of an executive department of this great Government. They are outside of any department, and the committee felt that for the good and due administration of business we ought to have every bureau and division in the public service attached to one of the great departments of the Government.

There is another view of the case, and that, speaking for myself, I regard as the most important. The laboring men of this country—and I think I am as good a friend to the laboring men as anybody; I have been a sort of laboring man all my life—are interested in a great many other subjects besides the mere question of labor. They are interested in the commercial and industrial life and development of this country. There is no class of people more interested in the manufacturing industries of this country; in the inland and the foreign commerce of this country; in the mining and fishery industries of this country.

Now, by putting the Bureau of Labor into this great department of commerce you enable that department to articulate and work in harmony with all the other industrial enterprises of the work in narmony with all the other industrial enterprises of the country. The laboring men and their department are as vitally interested as any class of our people can be in the progress of our manufacturing industries and in all that pertains to our industrial life. Occupying an isolated position, as they do, they are necessarily confined to the one subject of the labor question and the laws relative to that when they have a point of the laws relating to that subject, but when they become a part of have a voice and have something to say on all those other great and important and vital questions in which they are interested.

Now, I desire to say another thing. I believe the best way to treat the Senate is as a good Methodist brother would treat his fellow-associates in camp meeting, and that is to tell the honest truth. In respect to this opposition from the laboring men, which some think is so serious, I want to say to Senators that this bill, substantially in its present form, was reported in the early part of the last session of Congress. It was on the Calendar, and was known all over the country, and it was well known throughout the country that it proposed to attach the Department of Labor to the great department of commerce. No protests, no objections came to me, nor, so far as I know, to any other member of the

The first protest I had was from an officer connected with that Department, who came up here one day in the latter part of the Department, who came up here one day in the latter part of the session and called on me. He said there were a great many objections among the laboring men to this plan of attaching the Department of Labor to the department of commerce. I told him I had not heard of a protest, nor, as far as I knew, had any other member of our committee. It is my honest opinion—and I do not want to do anybody an injustice—that whatever opposition has come from labor sources has to a large extent been inspired from the inside of the Department of Labor. I do not say it is so absolutely, but from what little I know and from my acquaintance with the subject I am led to that conclusion.

Now, while I am talking on that subject, I may say that we have another independent bureau here, called the United States Fish Commission. It is always the case with these independent concerns that they love to be in the air, outside the control of any great executive department. They love to be in such condition that they have, as you might say, nobody to look to. I found in case of the Fish Commission that men in the scientific force of the Commission had been sending out letters and telegrams over the country to their friends, calling their attention to the fact that the scientific work in the Fish Commission could not be well performed if the Commission were attached to the department of commerce.

I desire to state that it is not the purpose of this bill to change the work or the scope of the work of any of these bureaus, either of the Fish Commission or of the Department of Labor. We simply believe that the laboring men are not only interested in the work of the Bureau of Labor, but that they are interested in all that pertains to a department of commerce and industries, in all that pertains to a department which is intended to help our commercial, our manufacturing, our mining, and our fishery industries, and that by working in harmony and as a part of this great department of industries, they can do more justice to their own work and will be in better shape to reach out and do some good in reference to these other branches committed to the department of commerce.

The committee never intended by the transfer of either the Department of Labor or the Fish Commission to the department of commerce to reflect in the slightest on the management of those bureaus or divisions of the public service. We simply felt that it was far better to have every one of these great bureaus and departments attached to an executive department which was not only in touch with Congress, but directly in touch with the head of the executive department of this Government.

I am unwilling to take up any further time of the Senate. have stated the facts in this case as they seem to me and as they have stated the facts in this case as they seem to me and as they appear to the committee, and I think it would be a great mistake and a great injustice to leave the Department of Labor outside, by itself, independent of any executive department.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I listened quite carefully to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], and he presents his case very clearly. At the same time I think there are reasons why it would be better that this Department should be permitted to remain as it is. If it were a provided to the contraction of ment should be permitted to remain as it is. If it were an original proposition for the creation of the Department of Labor, and the question were whether it should be allowed to be an independent department or whether it should be created as a bureau in the department of commerce, the suggestions of the Senator from Minnesota would certainly be quite cogent. But we have an ex-isting Department of Labor, the work of which is criticised by no On the contrary, it is commended in the highest degree, and nobody takes exception to the commendation bestowed upon it.

Now, let me read, Mr. President, what was said yesterday in the Senate by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], the present occupant of the Chair, in response to an inquiry made by me as to the character of the work now done by the Department in its present situation, a situation independent of any connection with any of the great Executive Departments, as we genreally term them. I read from yesterday's RECORD, and in order that the reply made by the Senator from New Hampshire may be correctly understood, I will read the inquiry propounded by myself which elicited that reply. The inquiry I addressed to the Senator from New Hampshire while he was upon the floor and by his country was this. by his courtesy was this:

Mr. Bacon. My inquiry is, whether, in the practical operation of the present Department of Labor, there has developed any such inefficiency as requires that its status shall be changed and that it shall be put under one of the great Executive Departments.

To which the Senator from New Hampshire replied as follows:

Mr. Gallinger. Well, Mr. President, I think we will all agree that no man has been rash enough to assert here or elsewhere that the Department of Labor as at present constituted has not done magnificent work or that it is subject to any criticism whatever; and yet it is an independent Department under the law to-day. The committee thought it was wise to include it in this new department. That is all. It may not be wise to do so, but the committee thinks it is. The Senate may think otherwise, and, of course, the committee will yield to the judgment of the Senate.

I could not, Mr. President, if I tried, utter words of too great praise for the distinguished statistician who is at the head of the present Department of Labor. His work is beyond praise; it has commended itself to all classes of our people; and I have never heard a word uttered by any man in public life in criticism of the administration of that Department.

in criticism of the administration of that Department.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a brief interruption?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I shall take up his time but for a moment.

Mr. BACON. I yield with much pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I expressly stated a moment ago that neither the committee nor I intended this as the least bit of criticism or reflection upon the Department. That was not our purpose at all. In the next place I called attention to the fact, and I ask the Senator to bear it in mind, that we do not attempt by this bill to disturb the functions and the work of the Bureau of Labor. It is neither a reflection upon the management nor a purpose to revoneither a reflection upon the management nor a purpose to revolutionize the work.

Mr. BACON. I am sure nobody misunderstood the honorable Senator from Minnesota. I did not, and I did not intend by anything I said to indicate in the least that there was any purpose or expression by him otherwise than that which he has now stated to the Senate.

The statement of the Senator is in effect a corroboration of that which was stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, and which I have just read, and it adds to the force of it. I do not intend in the slightest degree to indicate that the Senator from Minnesota intends by this to cast any reflection upon the Department of Labor as now constituted or upon its work. On the contrary, I take what he says as evidence to the contrary and as a reason why the present status should be allowed to remain undisturbed. If a change is to be made, there should be some reason indicated which would suggest that there would be an improvement in the service, that some good end would be accomplished. If no good is to be accomplished, if no improvement is to be secured, then the possibility that the contrary may result should be carefully considered by the Senate.

The creation of a new and independent department other than the great Executive Departments is not a new proposition, Mr. President. The Department of Agriculture was an independent department. It was created in the year 1862 and remained for more than twenty years, before it became one of the Executive Departments, an independent department of the Government un-der the control of the Commissioner of Agriculture, who was required to report directly to Congress. It is a mistake, as suggested by the Senator from Minnesota, that these departments are left without control and without the duty to report to any superior. The Agricultural Department, for twenty-odd years an independent department, presided over by a Commissioner, reported di-rectly to Congress and not to any of the Executive Departments, and as to the Bureau of Labor, the original act, I think, was passed seventeen years ago, although the present one was passed thirteen years ago. The original act, if I recollect correctly, of which the act I now hold in my hand was amendatory, was three or four years before that.

Mr. ALLISON. The original act was passed in 1884.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Iowa states it according to my recollection, and I am obliged to him for the definite information. It was passed in 1884, and under the act of 1888 the work of the Department was very much enlarged and its present status was created

Mr. ALLISON. It was established in 1884 as a part of the Interior Department and made independent in 1888.

Mr. BACON. I am glad the Senator has called attention to that fact, because it, too, emphasizes the fact that this is not an exceptional matter and is not an accidental matter. Here was a department which was originally a part of the Interior Department, and which Congress in its wisdom thought best to establish as an independent department in 1888. Therefore the act of 1888 was enacted, and since that time it has been an independent department, reporting directly to the President and to Congress, and partment, reporting directly to the President and to Congress, and doing not simply good work, but doing what the Senator from New Hampshire terms here perfect work, beyond all criticism, entitled to all praise. The Senator from Minnesota himself corroborates it and stands by it.

There is the old Latin maxim—quieta non movere. When a thing established is moving satisfactorily do not change it, if I may use so liberal a translation or construction of it. It is one of many of a similar kind that may be given to it. Why ment with that which is now in a satisfactory condition?

This is not an ornamental department by any means. It is one doing a great work. It is one doing a work which concerns a vast multitude of the people of this country—a multitude of people who are not in a position always to represent their interests in the most effective manner. It represents a vast multitude of people interested in a business which touches all the great industries of this country, a vast multitude of people engaged in that which concerns the great capital of the country, a vast multitude of people whose relations with the capital and the industries of the country are most important—relations the importance of which can not be overestimated; relations the importance of which is to-day challenging the consideration of the best minds in this land and of those most largely interested in these great enterprises, some of whom are members of the Senate and who have indicated their interest in the matter by the work which they This is not an ornamental department by any means. It is one indicated their interest in the matter by the work which they have been doing and are now doing.

Mr. President, if there were no other reason than the fact that Mr. President, if there were no other reason than the fact that after this department has once been a subordinate bureau of a great executive department, the United States Government thought it of sufficient importance to take it out and make it an independent department, and that it has remained so for thirteen years, and stands to-day beyond the criticism of anyone in this Chamber, and that nobody challenges the high eulogium pronounced upon it—Isay that if there were no other reason it ought to be sufficient to control us, that after such an experience and with be sufficient to control us—that after such an experience and with such a condition to make a change would to a certain degree be-little it, and that we ought not to belittle it, whether there is anything practical in it or not. If it is a mere sentiment, that sentiment ought to be regarded, concerning as it does so large a constituency.

I said this was not an ornamental bureau. the Senate the law prescribing the duties of this department. do so in connection with the repetition of the statement already several times made that it has been an independent department after having been so created out of what was before a dependent department. Section 7 is one of the sections in which there are enumerated the duties of the Commissioner and the work which shall be done by the department. sioner and the work which shall be done by the department.

That the Commissioner of Labor, in accordance with the general design and duties referred to in section 1 of this act, is specially charged to ascertain, at as early a date as possible and whenever industrial changes shall make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States, in leading countries where such articles are produced, by fully specified units of production and under a classification showing the different elements of cost, or approximate cost, of such articles of production, including the wages paid in such industries per day, week, month, or year, or by the piece; the hours employed per day; and the profits of the manufacturers and producers of such articles; and the comparative cost of living and the kind of living.

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner also to ascertain and report as to the effect of the customs laws, and the effect thereon of the state of the currency, in the United States, on the agricultural industry, especially as to

He shall also establish a system of reports by which at intervals of not less than two years he can report the general condition, so far as production is concerned, of the leading industries of the country. The Commissioner of Labor is also specially charged to investigate the causes of and facts relating to all controversies and disputes between employers and employees as they may occur, and which may tend to interfere with the welfare of the people of the different States, and report thereon to Congress. The Commissioner of Labor shall also obtain such information upon the various subjects committed to him as he may deem desirable from different foreign nations, and what, if any, convict-made goods are imported into this country, and if so, from whence.

Sec. 8. That the Commissioner of Labor shall annually make a report in writing to the President and Congress of the information collected and collated by him, and containing such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the department. He is also authorized to make special reports on particular subjects whenever required to do so by the President or either House of Congress, or when he shall think the subject in his charge requires it. He shall, on or before the 15th day of December in each year, make a report in detail to Congress of all moneys expended under his direction during the preceding fiscal year.

The rest of it is directory as to some of the work, etc.

Now, Mr. President, suppose it be possible that the change may work to disadvantage. Is not even the fact of the possibility enough to give us pause in the matter, because we stand in the face of what is conceded by all to be a perfect machine, a perfect working machine, one doing most important work, and, as mentioned by the Senator from New Hampshire, work beyond all praise in its efficiency?

Now, the Senator from Minnesota made one suggestion to which I think it is proper to allude, not for the purpose of criticizing it, but for the purpose of seeing whether or not a conclusion may not be legitimately drawn. The Senator says he thinks the opposition to the transfer of the Department of Labor comes from the inside of the Department of Labor. If so, there must be some reason for it. Here is a department which has all praise. Here is an officer who has accomplished a great work, an officer now in charge of it, an officer intended to be continued in charge of He must have some good reason if he thinks it will work ill to have the department put into the department of commerce or any other department. He must, from the experience which he May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.
Mr. LODGE. Do I understand him to say that the Commissioner of the Department of Labor, Colonel Wright, is opposed to this change?

Mr. BACON. I do not say so; but I say the Senator from Minnesota, in his presentation of the reasons why this department should be put under the department of commerce, said he was satisfied that the opposition to the inclusion of it in the department of commerce came from the Department of Labor

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but I do not understand he said it came

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but I do not understand he said it came from the Commissioner.

Mr. BACON. Well, I do not say so. I do not say it comes from anybody. I am simply repeating—

Mr. LODGE. I merely want to say in this connection, if the Senator will allow me, that the Commissioner of the Department of Labor comes from my State. He is an old personal friend of mine. He lives in my neighborhood in the State. He lives in the district which I formerly represented in the House. I have known him many years. Nobody has a higher opinion of him than I have, and if he is opposed to giving the Department of Labor Cabinet representation, then I very much misunderstand his attitude.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator this question. I have no information whatever on the subject, and I am simply repeating

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator this question. I have information whatever on the subject, and I am simply repeating what the Senator from Minnesota said. I never heard any suggestion except that made by the Senator from Minnesota.

would go a long ways with me—

Mr. LODGE. I did not understand that the Senator from Minnesota meant to imply that the Commissioner is opposing it.

Mr. NELSON. I did not. I did not say the Commissioner was, but I said whatever opposition had been worked up against this among the laboring interests was inspired from the inside of the Department, and I think there are Senators on the floor who can bear witness to the fact that the labor interests of this country as a whole are not opposed to this transfer.

Mr. BACON. What I was saying, and to which I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, is this:

Is he prepared to state that this distinguished and efficient officer favors this measure? It would go a long ways with me toward dissipating whatever objection I might have to it.

Mr. LODGE. I have had in the past a great many letters from labor organizations urging the creation of a department, so as to give to the interests of labor as well as to the interests of commerce and industries Cabinet representation. That could only be done, of course, by putting the Department of Labor into an be done, of course, by putting the Department of Labor into an executive department. It was not sufficiently large to make an executive department by itself. Therefore it was joined, as I understood, with other subjects. That was my understanding of the bill. I have not this winter talked with Colonel Wright about it, but I have certainly understood in the past that he favored that scheme. If he does not, it is very strange that he should have concealed it from me, because he has usually talked with me with great freedom about any matters before the Senate effecting his department. I certainly understood he was friendly. affecting his department. I certainly understood he was friendly

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Has it not been his understanding that Mr. Wright desired the Department of Labor to be elevated to the rank of an executive department, which would entitle it to an officer commonly called a Cabinet officer, although there is no such officer known by such title to the statute law? Is not that the fact? Or is it true that the Senator has ever had from that officer any expression which would indicate that he desired it attached to some other department in order, through the executive officer of that department, that his bureau should have Cabinet representation?

Mr. LODGE. I understood that he favored having the Department of Labor in an executive department with Cabinet representation?

sentation. Of course he realizes, as everybody must realize, that his Department alone would not be sufficient to constitute a Cabinet department; that it must be united with other cognate matters. My very strong impression has been that he has favored for a long time some organization of this kind.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask, if the Senator from Georgia will allow

Mr. BACON. Certainly. Mr. HALE. Is the Senator from Massachusetts certain in his own mind that the Commissioner of Labor, at the head of what is now called the Department of Labor, an independent organiza-tion, desires that his Department shall be merged in another new department, of which it becomes simply a bureau?

Mr. BACON. And he a subordinate.

Mr. HALE. And he a subordinate. I do not know; I have not the relations with the Commissioner of Labor which the Senator from Massachusetts has; but unless he is very confident of that, I should have very grave doubts whether the Commissioner of Labor, who is a very efficient officer and who has an independent work, and who is not a subordinate of any department, would desire that he should be put into this new department as a subordinate, with his department as a single bureau, and a bureau which, if the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin prevails, may at any time be consolidated with other bureaus. Senator from Massachusetts sees the condition.

Mr. LODGE. I see that.
Mr. HALE. Is he very well assured on that point?

Mr. LODGE. I am certain that the Commissioner of Labor is in favor of the consolidation of the statistical departments so far as possible. I have had talks with him about that many times. I have always felt that he is a man above all others to be the head of the permanent census. I think he has felt this to be the true organization of the statistical departments of the Govern-I have not talked with him, I repeat, this winter, in regard to this specific bill, but I have always understood from him gard to this specific only, but I have always understood from him that he feels that labor ought to be directly represented in the Cabinet, and that he favors a bill of this kind because it is impossible to make a Cabinet position out of his department alone; it is necessary to add other matters.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I submit that if the Senator will confer with his friend, the Commissioner, he will find that the idea of the Commissioner is to have something added to his Department and thereby create that into a regular department, and not that he now contemplates the idea that he shall be made a subordinate of some other department and his Department a mere Bureau, which, as the Senator from Maine says, under the amendment offered may hereafter be simply merged into and consolidated with some other bureau.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is a question of names. If you call this new department the "department of labor" and put into it all the commercial bureaus from the Treasury Department, it would suit me exactly as well. What I want to get is improved administration, and that I think we are going to reach.

Mr. McCOMAS. Could we not call it the "department of com-

Mr. McCOMAS. merce and labor?"

You can call it anything you please so we get Mr. LODGE. the result, which I believe will be the better administration of many important bureaus which ought to be grouped under one department instead of being in a department, as some of them are now, which is overloaded with other work.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, not to detain the Senate, I wish to call attention to what I consider to be the true, practical considerations in this matter. One I have already stated, and I will repeat it in brief. It is that we now have a perfect working department, and it is altogether within the range of probability that if we subordinate the Commissioner of Labor to the head of a department there may be such interference and such embarrassment as to impair that which all now say is a perfect work and needs no improvement.

That is one consideration. The other, to which I have already alluded, is that the great mass of the constituency of this country who are directly presumed to be interested in this matter will be the better satisfied if it does not appear that this Department, which was once a subordinate bureau, and out of that subordinate bureau elevated into the dignity of an independent department, has been again reduced to the status of a dependent, subordinate bureau in another department. I think even if the latter is noth-ing but a sentiment, those who are interested in that sentiment are sufficient in their importance and in the interest which they represent to command our respect for that sentiment.

represent to command our respect for that sentiment.

Now, Mr. President, I will simply read one sentence from a letter which was read yesterday in the Senate. It was laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore of the Senate, to whom it had been addressed by the president of the American Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers, protesting against the inclusion of the Department of Labor, now an independent department, in the department of commerce as a subordinate bureau. The letter was addressed to the President pro tempore, as I said, and by him laid before the Senate and read at length. The concluding sentence of it alone I now read, because it appears in full in the Record of vesterday's proceedings. RECORD of yesterday's proceedings.

It is therefore urgently requested that in the event that the honorable Senate should deem it wise to enact Senate bill 569, that the Department of Labor as now constituted may be eliminated from its provisions.

I understand that the Federation of Labor really represents the leading labor organizations of the United States, and unless there is some good, controlling reason why it should be so included, having now a department working well, that simple request, I having now a department working well, that simple request, I think, ought to be regarded by us.

For that reason, Mr. President, I trust that the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama may prevail.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, as a member of the subcommittee who have had in charge this bill now for more than a year, having given the subject a great deal of study and attention, and being to a very great extent familiar with the sources from which this demand every I feel that the discussion of the bill has not this demand comes, I feel that the discussion of the bill has not fairly presented the case to the Senate.

The object of the proposed department of commerce is to secure more detailed attention, more concert of action on the part of the Government to the great industrial interests of the country as well as the commercial interests, and when I say industrial interests I mean to include capital and labor as well.

It is a well-known fact that when our Government was organized there were but three departments of Government. As the country has grown in population and wealth and development additional departments have been organized to meet the necessities of the case. That condition has always come as a result of overburdening all the departments transacting the business of the Government, and that is the condition to-day, Mr. President, particularly with regard to the Treasury Department and the Department of the Interior. In the growth and development of our country new conditions and varied conditions have made it an absolute necessity to organize bureaus in order that the interests of these industries could be looked after. That has necessitated the attachment of those bureaus to one department or another until, as I said, both the Treasury and the Interior Departments are to-day overloaded.

Now, I believe, as a matter of principle, it is all important that there should be no independent bureau representing any interests, but all should be attached to some department or another under the executive influence of that department. Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. HANNA.

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Adopting that general rule, the force of which I see, what would the Senator do with the Interstate Commerce Commission? That is a purely independent body.

Mr. HANNA. If I was going to attach that Bureau to a department I would attach it to the Department of Justice. It is purely a judicial body, as I understand it.

Mr. HALE. If the great end and aim of this bill, for which I know the Senator has been earnestly and seriously engaged for years, is to include foreign commerce, internal commerce, manufactures, and all that relates to the great laboring interests of the country engaged either in foreign commerce, internal commerce, or manufactures, certainly the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is simply judicial in its decisions affecting interstate commerce, ought to be under the head and control of this department, it seems to me, if any of these other bureaus are to

Mr. HANNA. If the Senator will offer that as an amendment

I will vote for it.
Mr. HALE. I
Mr. HOAR. I am preparing an amendment now to that effect. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. I would remind the Senator from Maine, with the permission of the Senator from Ohio, of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has determined that it is not a judicial body.

Mr. HOAR. I will ask the Senator if he thinks it would be proper to put a purely judicial function of the Government into any executive department whatever.

Mr. HANNA. I must ask that I be not led away from the argument I am trying to make by a proposition which is not before the Senate. We are discussing the question as to whether or not the Bureau of Labor shall become a part of this department. say that it should; and when the statement is made on this floor that the laboring interests of this country are opposed to it, I do not believe it. I recognize that Mr. Gompers, president of the Federation of Labor, represents a large element of those people and speaks with authority for himself, representing the organization that he does.

But that he does.

But that the whole army of laboring men in this country are opposed to this measure I deny. It has been my privilege to discuss this question with labor leaders many times during the last year, and most of them are heartily in favor of a department of the Government to be called the labor department; and if you call it the labor department and attach all else that is provided for in this bill to that department, you will get a letter from every one of them supporting it of them supporting it.

It does not make any difference what the name of this department may be, as an industrial feature it represents capital as well as labor. There is no interest in the United States to-day that demands the attention of Congress to help and further our development more than this very question of having an established department of the Government, acting in concert with like de-partments all over Europe and the civilized world; for a depart-ment of commerce is established and acting along these lines in every nation that competes with us in the markets of the

It makes no difference whether you call it commerce, industry, and labor, or one of the three, the object is, as I understand it, to bring into concrete form an organization as a department of this Government that shall be charged with and shall be responsible for looking after and furthering the interests of our industries and commerce along the same line and for the same purpose for which all other departments were organized, and particularly that of Agriculture.

It has been stated that the Department of Agriculture was organized and in operation as a separate bureau for twenty years before it was made into a Department. That, I presume, is the fact; but it is no less a fact that all the branches of industry which have contributed to the necessity for a department of commerce are clamoring here to-day for the same recognition, and they urge the same reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Gallinger in the chair). The Senator from Ohio will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid.

porarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Chair hears none. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Ohio is not quite right in saying that the Agricultural Department for years was a bureau under any department. It was like the Department of Labor.

Mr. HANNA. I did not say that it was under any department.

Mr. HALE. It was not a bureau. It was called the Department.

Mr. HALE. It was not a bureau. It was called the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HANNA. It had no Cabinet officer.

Mr. HALE. It had no representative in the Cabinet, but for more than twenty years it was like the Department of Labor, and like the Fish Commission, and perhaps one or two others, an independent department technically, without having a head in the Cabinet, but it had no relation as a bureau to any department.

Mr. HANNA. I understand that; I appreciate it; and that is a growing evil, if I may call it such, in reference to our departmental or bureau organization. The development of the country in all its ramifications makes it important and necessary that some factor of Government should give attention to those particular interests. These bureaus multiply. If, as you have proposed to do, you strike from this bill the Bureau of the Census you might go on, if you want to defeat the bill, and strike every other bureau from it that would give it any standing or make any demand for such a department.

Now, in reference to the Census Bureau, if it is the intention of the Government to make that a permanent bureau—Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question in connection with what he has said?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.
Mr. CLAY. The main purpose of this bill is that "it shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such industries and such markets, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law.'

I understand that is the prime purpose of the bill, and it was proposed to transfer the Labor Department and the Census Bureau to this new department, simply to enable the new secretary to carry out the original designs of the bill. As I understand it, neither the majority nor the minority of the committee had it in view to cripple or in any way injure the labor interests of this country, but that the labor interests would in no wise be affected by this transfer; that the Labor Department would be continued to be operated just as it had been in the past, and that these departments were transferred to the department of commerce simply to aid that department in carrying out its purposes.

Mr. HANNA. That is all right; I do not object to that statement; nor do I anticipate that the proposed transfer will in any way interfere with the efficiency of any of these bureaus. If we are to make the Census Bureau a permanent organization, it is to be done for what purpose? To enumerate in every decade our population? No; but in order that the Government may have upon file the statistics gathered every year in relation to the great industrial interests, and in order that those statistics may be obtained in a way that would be entirely reliable. I claim that that is the only argument by which we can support regularly and permanently a Census Bureau. The simple taking of the census once in ten years does not justify the expense to this Government of maintaining a large of handreds of clarks. maintaining a bureau of hundreds of clerks.

In passing I wish to pay a tribute to the present Census Bureau for the efficiency they have displayed in gathering valuable statistics with reference to our industrial interests. It is the first time within my knowledge that it ever has been successfully ac-complished. I want to preserve that feature of the Census Bu-reau. I want to encourage it. I want to amplify it in every posreau. I want to encourage it. I want to amplify it in every possible way by able executive ability. Therefore I claim that that Bureau should be put back into this bill, as the way by which it can best serve and the only way by which it can serve fully and completely the industrial interests of this country.

With reference to the labor feature, as I stated before, Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say that there is no strong opposition among the workingmen to this bill. With all due respect to Mr. Compary's letter, wiching his own ideas men this question if Mr. Gompers's letter, voicing his own ideas upon this question, if it is understood by organized and unorganized labor that that feature of our industrial interests is to be made prominent in this department, you will find a hearty cooperation. It matters not to me if the distinguished and able chief of the Labor Bureau should be placed at the head of this department. You may call it a department of labor, for aught I care, because you can not separate that part of the industrial interest from the other.

Mr. President, all the great commercial bodies and industrial organizations of this country have been demanding, not particularly as a right but in the interest of the great commercial and larly as a right, but in the interest of the great commercial and industrial interests, that such a bureau should be established. When we come to consider the responsibilities of the Government by comparing the cost of its execution, the forty or fifty thousand dollars a year additional that will give us this department, whose business it shall be to look in detail to all that will contribute to the development of the great industrial interests of this country, we are accomplishing a purpose the cost of which is a bagatelle. Now, what else is there in the way of it? Simply an indisposition or a jealousy, perchance, on the part of those who are connected or disconnected with these bureaus opposing the concrete form of these interests under one head. Is there anyone on this floor who can dispute the fact that a close, effective organization, with one able executive head, is always the best way to accomplish a result? Has it not been proven in every department of the Government which has been organized and put into execution that its value toward the great body politic has been enhanced? Has it not been demonstrated that when the Navy separated from the Army the Navy was better provided for, and when one bureau after the other was separated during the progress and development of this country that each one benefited thereby?

Now, Mr. President, my proposition is that we have grown to such proportions in this country, and it is a demonstrated and established fact that owing to our natural advantages and our great resources we are progressing at such a rate, that we can not measure our necessities until we are face to face with them. We are on the eve of a condition in this country there now. where we are forced to expand our trade and commerce. Already our productive capacity is far beyond our capacity for consumption, and either one of two things must result

We must either find a market for that surplus or we must restrict our production to our own home wants. We are entering a new field of competition with the trade of the world; we are entering upon a new era in our development, and it is the business of the Congress of the United States, in any and every way that it can contribute to it, to grant such conditions as are asked for in this bill. I admit the foundation and purpose of the bill as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] has stated, but it is not circum-

Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] has stated, but it is not circumscribed merely to the collection of statistics.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Ohio misunderstood me. I voted in favor of this bill in the committee and I expect to vote for it here. I said that the prime purpose of the bill in transferring to this new department the Department of Labor, which is an independent was simply to aid the secretary of the new pendent department, was simply to aid the secretary of the new department in carrying out the purposes of the bill.

Mr. HANNA. That is as I understand it.

Mr. CLAY. I said that the relations between labor and capital were important in manufacturing and in establishing new markets, and if we did not transfer certain work to this new de-partment it would never accomplish its purposes. That was the position I took.

Mr. HANNA. I perfectly agree with the Senator from Georgia.
Mr. HALE. I was rather surprised that the Senator should Mr. HANNA. have fallen into what is rather a commonly accepted fad at the present day, that we shall go into a decline if we do not capture the trade of the world. Does not the Senator realize that in the last four or five years we have captured pretty much all the trade of the world that is worth anything?

Mr. HANNA. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator and I disagree.

Mr. HANNA. We do.

Mr. HALE. The record of what has been done under the Dingley tariff act is the most amazing record of the progress and absorption of foreign trade ever exhibited to the world. We have absorbed foreign trade in the great countries that are our competitors, and we have a population capable of almost indefinite consumption. We have not wasted our energies in a dream of what is called oriental trade, which never did and never will figure in comparison with the markets of the civilized countries of the world that are our competitors.

We have invaded England and Germany and Austria and Belgium and France and Italy and Russia, and have a record of trade established such as has never been seen. For the Senator, who stands as the representative as much as any man upon this floor of the exploits and achievements of the Dingley tariff act, to join the ranks of the men who declare that we will be ruined if we do not get markets for our goods is to me a surprise.

Some day, Mr. President, I shall take occasion more fully to expose what I call this fallacy, this dream, this assumption, that the oriental trade is the thing for which we have got to live hereafter.

Mr. HANNA. I do not remember having mentioned the Orient, and I should be very sorry to admit that the Senator from Maine is correct in saying that we have already captured the markets of Europe. If we have got those markets, then we have certainly limited ourselves to our present capacity.

Mr. HALE. We are increasing all the time in those markets.

Mr. HANNA. That is what I said.

Mr. HALE. And we do not need further action, nor further departments, nor further legislation.

Mr. HANNA. I understand the Senator from Maine is simply opposed to this bill, and he is very fertile in his arguments. If I had time, I should wait and hear what he has to say when he makes a speech later.

I do not claim to represent singly or particularly any interest on this floor. If my business life has been such as to enable me to speak advisedly upon the necessities and the wants of the great commercial and industrial interests of this country, I feel that I am happy in having such a fad that will enable me occasionally to make my appearance on the floor.

But, Mr. President, what I began to say was, that the commercial and industrial interests of this country, in the same way as the agricultural interests, are demanding something of this kind as an auxiliary to the further development of those great industrial and commercial interests, and I am trying to emphasize the fact that when I speak for the industrial interests I include labor, organized or unorganized, and I include any other business or feature which in any way can be connected with that development. I say as an argument in favor of this bill that I believe all those interests can be better served by it. I do not believe there is a member of this body who does not wish that to be so. The question of detail is insignificant, in my judgment, compared with the benefits to be derived from such a measure.

In regard to the Labor Bureau question, I want to repeat and to emphasize that I should have no objection to calling it the department of labor, or the department of labor and industry, or the department of commerce, industry, and labor—by whatever name you please—if all the elements that can contribute to the success of the great commercial and industrial interests of this country can be brought into action and complete administration.

I say in reference to the organization of the Census Bureau that it is a great mistake to leave that feature out of this bill, because that great organization can be employed, and usefully employed, every year—yes, every month and day of the year—in promoting those interests which we advocate, in furnishing statistics which are absolutely important, aye, which are absolutely a necessity for the country to have, because there are no other channels provided for their collection and assemblage.

It would be a misfortune at this time in our history, in our condition, to divide this industrial question by raising the issue that one part of it is labor and the other part capital. Those interests are identical and mutual. What is good for one is equally good for the other, and it is a mistake that either the representatives of labor or of capital should attempt to use the argument that there is any difference in interest other than sentimental.

It is a good thing for us to do to unite our efforts to bring those elements of society upon the same plane, upon an equal footing, in considering all their interests in this country for which we have the right to legislate. I will concede to them, or to the bureaus proposed to be included in this new department, the name by which it shall be called and a member of the Cabinet, who shall be the executive head of that department. I care nothing for that. I am pleading for the results, which I believe and know will be beneficial to the development of this country, to its future growth and prosperity, and not for any sentiment as to the name or as to the men.

I take it, whoever is the President of the United States, if this bill should become a law, would exercise his judgment and discretion in placing at the head of this new department a man in every way qualified to represent its interests, who would honestly and disinterestedly do all in his power to serve the interests over which he is placed by a concert of action with all the other departments and machinery of the Government, and would lend his aid in every way possible for the further development of our great interests at home and abroad. It needs no argument, Mr. President, to inspire that feeling of Americanism in the hearts of President, to inspire that feeling of Americanism in the hearts of the American people.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I send to the desk, and ask that it may be printed, so that it may come up hereafter. The bill evidently will not pass to-day. Let the Secretary read the amendment, and then let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 3, section 4, line 22, after the word commerce," it is proposed to insert:

And the Interstate Commerce Commission and all that pertains to the same be, and the same are hereby, placed under the jurisdiction and made part of the department of commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. ELKINS. So far as I am concerned, I think that is a very good amendment, without being printed.

Mr. HALE. It does not hurt it to be printed.

Mr. ELKINS. Of course it does not hurt it to be printed, but it does not help it.

Mr. HALE. I ask that it be printed.
Mr. ELKINS. The amendment is easily understood.
Mr. HALE. I ask that it be printed, because the bill evidently will not pass to-night, and therefore I am entirely willing that Senators shall have the opportunity to consider the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Has the Senator any objection to taking the vote on the amendment now? We can consider the amendment without its being printed.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator wish to discuss the matter further now? The bill can not be passed to-night.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to say a few words on the pending

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of creating or establishing another department of the Government, to be called the department of commerce, if you please, or the department of commerce and labor, or the department of commerce and industry. This question has been thought about, mooted, and discussed for more than twenty-five years, and during that time I have never found anybody substantially opposed to it. Now that everything is expanding in our Government, that our business is enlarging on sea and land in agriculture, manufacturing, mining, banking, railroading, it does seem to me that the interests of the country can be better safeguarded by dividing the

The best reason for the passage of this bill is the congested condition of business in the Treasury and Interior departments and in some other departments. While I think we have had able men at the head of the Treasury Department and that they have done all that could be done, and without disparagement of any of our very able Secretaries, it may be said that it is impossible for one man to control and manage the large interests which center in the Treasury Department. It is impossible for one man to give that attention to the business which naturally comes to the Treasury Department which will enable him to administer it as wisely and as well as it should be administered.

It was for a long time thought that there ought to be two Sec-

It was for a long time thought that there ought to be two Secretaries of the Treasury-one to take charge of the disbursements and the other the receipts—in order to divide the business and the and the other the receipts—in order to divide the business and the responsibility of administration; but it seems to me that this bill meets the difficulty of congestion in both the Treasury and Interior departments by giving something from each of them to the department of commerce provided by this bill. It takes several important bureaus from the Treasury Department and transfers them to the new department, thereby relieving the Treasury Department. The same thing occurs in the Interior Department, which is also convected.

which is also congested.

I believe, in addition to these reasons, that our rapidly increasing business on land and on sea will be better subserved by creating this new department. Vast responsibilities, new duties, increased business will come to the Executive Departments of the Government by reason of our expansion—the acquisition of the Philippines, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the rapid growth of our Alaskan possessions. We must provide for these new duties and this increased business by relieving the Treasury and other departments of the heavy burdens now resting upon them. Business is multiplying so rapidly in the United States and in our new possessions that the public service must suffer and the interests of the Government and people be neglected unless there is some

Our Cabinet is not large as compared with European cabinets. The President, in my opinion, would be aided by having another Cabinet adviser. It will be helpful to the President, it seems to me, and, as was so well said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Hanna], the interests of labor and capital, of so delicate and peculiar character, will both have better attention and will be better subserved by this new department. The labor interests of the country will receive better attention, and perhaps the difficulties between labor and capital can be better solved by having the care and attention of a Cabinet officer. The safety of society and even the Government depend upon keeping labor and capital reconciled and in harmony, as they should be.

I do not care what name shall be given to this new department, the committee thought one name was best for the reason that all the departments have but one name. We have the Treasury Department, the War Department, the State Department, and so Department, the War Department, the State Department, and so on, and the committee agreed it would be well to keep a single name, but if it will help the bill in any way to call the proposed department the department of commerce and labor, or the department of commerce and industry, or all three, I have no objection.

But the great reason for this bill and the creation of a new department is that it is impossible now, I believe, for the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior to control and manage their departments as well and efficiently as if they were divided and relieved of some of the burdens and work. We ought to relieve the congested condition of the public business in the to relieve the congested condition of the public business in the various departments, so that it can have better and more thor-ough attention. This is in the interest of the people. The Government was made for the people, and not the people for the Gov-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pettus].

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I do not think that the argument that the business in the Executive Departments is now congested and, therefore, they are not capable of transacting it will hold good. The question is whether any of the bureaus which are proposed to be transferred by this bill to the department of commerce are in arrears in the transaction of their business, and that it is in such a condition that the head of the department to which the bureau belongs could not bring up the current work. I have heard of no such instance in regard to any one of these departments. Then how do you benefit such departments by taking from them bureaus in which there is no congestion of business, and taking at the same time all the clerks in those bureaus, and leaving the other bureaus where it is alleged there is a congestion of business? I do not think that gives any relief to the other departments. So I can not see any force in that proposition as a matter of argumentation in behalf of this bill.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Hanna] announces a very important point, I think, and that is, that it is important to have one head. That is the very reason I shall vote to strike the Department of Labor from this bill and leave it with one head, instead of putting it under and subordinate to another head, thus dividing the responsibility.

If the Senator from Ohio wants efficiency, let the Department of Labor, which has been administered with efficiency, with success, and with acceptability, remain as it is, an independent department, with a head responsible to Congress. Now, we propose to take such a Department of Labor and make it subordinate; to destroy it as a Department of Labor and make it simply a bureau, destroy it as a Department of Labor and make it supportunate; to with a master—the head of that Department—who must be consulted in the transaction of its business, and whose policy must be followed, and not the policy of the present head of the Department of Labor, who becomes merely the chief of a bureau. You destroy his efficiency; you destroy the very thing for which the Department of Labor was organized and constituted.

Why is this? Why do you want to subordinate the Department of Labor to the head of the department of commerce? What is the policy of it? What is to be gained by it? Everybody admits that that Department has been efficiently and acceptably administered. Why not let well enough alone? Why take this Department, which has been so successfully, so acceptably, and so efficiently administered, and subordinate it to the will and guidance and direction of we know not whom? Is that good policy? Is that practical legislation? Can that lead to good and beneficial results?

We have a department of Public Printing, employing a large beneficial results?

We have a department of Public Printing, employing a large force. Must every department and bureau that Congress may deem important to be established be taken and put under the head of some other department? Why shift the responsibility for the administration of the Department of Labor from Congress to the head of an executive department? We have had it under our control ever since its organization? What objection has ever been made to it?

We have had the Department of Printing under Congressional control. What objection has been made to that? We created a Department of Labor; we gave it the next highest position to an executive department with a secretary, and the head of it has the same authority in his department that a secretary has in his department. He has control of his department; he is responsible for it when there is one head and one management. But this bill proposes to subordinate that head and that one management to the head of another, to the control of another. I can not see any reason why that should be done. If this Department of Labor reason why that should be done. If this Department of Labor has been inefficient, if it has proved wanting in any respect, if we saw that it needed a guidance and control which Congress is not capable of exercising over it, then there would be policy in putting it under somebody else.

I think the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pettus] ought to be adopted. I think it ought to be adopted in the interest of the public service. I think it ought to be adopted in deference to the wishes of those at whose instance.

be adopted in deference to the wishes of those at whose instance be adopted in deference to the wishes of those at whose instance the Department of Labor was organized, and whose views have been so strongly expressed in the language of the president of the American Federation of Labor, which is printed in the proceedings of yesterday. The point is expressly made in that communication and the reasons set forth why this Department was organized and why it should not be subordinated to any other.

Mr. ELKINS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. Suppose we call the new department the department of labor; would that help the situation, in the Senator's mind?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think not, because you take it away from where it has been efficient. If you put the Commissioner of Labor at the head of it-

Mr. ELKINS. We do not know who may be put at the head of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have now the Department of Labor, which has been practically under the same management ever since it was organized. It has been in the hands of an efficient officer, who has administered it successfully and acceptably; of whose administration there has been no criticism, and there has been no scandal connected with it in any way. He has met the expectations of the people; he has met the expectations of Congress, under whom he has been acting, and now it is proposed to make him subordinate to somebody else.

Mr. ELKINS. If I do not interrupt the Senator—
Mr. COCKRELL. It is no interruption.
Mr. ELKINS. If the change be made, it would not impair the efficiency of that Department; it would be just as efficient as it is

Mr. COCKRELL. But you can not serve a master and be independent

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; but he must serve somebody; now who is his master.

Mr. COCKRELL. He serves Congress now.

Mr. ELKINS. Oh, you want a parliamentary government. Mr. COCKRELL. That officer is independent now. I want

Mr. COCKRELL. That officer is independent now. I want the Department of Labor to remain just as it is; just as it has proved a success, and has been beneficial and acceptable to the country.

Mr. ELKINS. I think Congress has a good deal to do without managing executive bureaus.

Mr. COCKRELL. We hav We have proved so eminently successful in that matter that I think we ought to be allowed to go on and have credit for it.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator, is it not true that the Department of Labor, doing this work in reference to the great interests of labor, has remained unmolested since it was organized? It has never been considered a political department, and no Administration has interfered with it or removed the head of it. Under Republican and Democratic Administrations it has gone on as a separate, a distinct, and independent Department. Will those conditions be observed, and will they apply when you put it into one of the political departments?

Mr. COCKRELL. Necessarily they can not be, for you then make the head of that Department subordinate to another. secretary of commerce is not going to let that Department remain as it is to-day, to go on and transact its business as it does to-day; but he will supervise its reports in every way and will direct and control them. He will direct what appropriations shall be made; he will pass upon everything; everything will have to be done in subordination to his will, and so, necessarily, the Department will become political. Everything that you can bring up as to the efficiency of this Bureau must emanate from its remaining as it is. You can not better it. It would be an untried experiment to have this Bureau made subordinate to some one else. As Mr. Gompers says, in his letter of January 20, 1902:

The creation of a department of commerce with the provision for the subordination of the Department of Labor will minimize the importance of labor's interests and minimize the present Department of Labor. Against such a procedure, in the name of American labor, I enter my most solemn Necessarily you subordinate it. Take the Census Office, for example—an independent department. It is now controlled by the Director of the Census. Put it under the secretary of commerce and it becomes a mere bureau. The Director of the Census will do nothing without the approval and sanction of the secretary, and it is idle for Senators to say that when you place these Departments under a secretary you will have them administered just as they are administered now. It can not be. No secretary will take the responsibility for the administration of these offices and yet have no control or influence over them. He would be an incompetent secretary if he did. He would admit his incompetency to control and direct them. You want them placed there, and the object in placing them there is that they may be under and the object in pacing them there is that they may be under the control and direction of the secretary of commerce. Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me? Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly. Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator assert that the Secretary of the Treasury interferes with the administration of the Marine-

Hospital Service or the Coast and Geodetic Survey?

Mr. COCKRELL. Most unquestionably. I am delighted that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire has mentioned that, for I did not want to refer to the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, because it occurred under a Democratic Administration.

Mr. GALLINGER. What I mean is in the administration of the duties of the office.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the administration of the office of United States Coast and Geodetic Survey one of the most efficient and able men who ever occupied that office was removed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it was deteriorated in every way, as the distinguished Senator from Iowa and others who know of that circumstance can testify. It was greatly lowered. Its usefulness was impaired, and it was with some difficulty that it was maintained without being wiped out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, but still it has remained under the Treasury Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, it has still remained under the Treasury Department, but the Secretary of the Treasury interfered. He controlled. He directed. The Secretaries always have done it, and you can not get a strong man, who feels the weight of his responsibility as secretary of commerce, to take under his wing and be responsible to the public and to the world for the administration of a bureau under him and yet expect that bureau to act independently. The propositions are incongruous and incompatible. When the Department of Labor comes under the secretary of commerce it will become subordinate to him and must bow to his will, and the Department will be controlled to a greater or less extent.

Now, what is the reason for the transfer? Why shall we take a Department of Labor, which has proved so eminently successful and is so satisfactory and against which no complaint is made, and transfer it to this new department? Why shall we make an experiment and place it in a subordinate position, in defiance of the protests of those at whose instance it was organized, when no one can show that any benefit will be derived by anyone from the change? It is an experiment, a trial, and one that will prove unprofitable and unbeneficial to the interests of labor.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall vote for the pending bill, however much it may be amended. It may be made much better than it is, I know. I think the title should be changed, for one thing, and that the new department should be called the department of commerce and industries, to anticipate a number of other departments the creation of which will probably be urged in a very short time.

ably be urged in a very short time.

I rise to say a few words because of the speech just made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell]. I believe the Department of Labor, now an independent department or bureau, should be maintained in its independence. It was instioureau, should be maintained in its independence. It was instituted, in the first place, because of the demands of the laboring elements of this country for a representative in the capital to give statistics that would be for the enlightenment of this country upon their relations with the capital of the country. That it has been administered, through changing administrations, without a change in its head is an evidence of satisfactory work. The public has received with grateful acknowledgment the achievements of that Department. They have been satisfactory to the Congress, and, as far as we know, to the Executive. To maintain the absolute independence of this Bureau from any political influence is the first question.

Now, it is a patent fact, and nobody knows it any better than the gentlemen who press this bill, that the change from an independent to a subordinate place changes it from an impartial, nonpartisan bureau for the purpose of gathering statistics and information into a political bureau of a political department; and, as the Senator from Missouri says, no Secretary will be responsible for any bureau or department under him, or any officer who is subject to his direction (and he should not be so held accountable), unless it or he is directly responsible to him.

Everybody knows that this department chief, the secretary of commerce, like the Secretary of the Treasury and the other Secretaries, will be a political appointment. Such officers are the political advisers of the President on all questions of public policy. They are his advisers as to appointments to be made to carry out and execute the laws of Congress. In the Department of Labor, as it now exists to-day, no sort of political influence is exercised as far as I know. I know nothing about the political views of the chief or of the subordinates under him. I know that their work has been approved. It has been of the very highest order of merit. It has been accepted, not only in the United States but abroad, as presenting the most authentic statistics and informa-

And now we have here the great laboring organizations of the country and the unorganized labor of the country, for whom the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. Hanna] has said he has the warmest interest and feeling, with a demand for a nonpartisan, impartial, independent department that can look after their affairs, so far as concerns statistics and information. They will not be satisfied if the Department is transferred to a department which of necessity will make it a political bureau, as the other bureaus are to a greater or less extent.

Mr. President, what advantage is it to the labor of the country, organized or unorganized, that this independent, impartial, nonpartisan bureau shall be made a political one? Its very merit and usefulness will have been destroyed when that is done. all know that there will not be a single report made from that Department, when it becomes a bureau of another and a political department, which has not been revised and lead penciled and corrected and sent back for revision over and over again until the views of the party in power are carried out and expressed. Everybody knows that the bureau officer who in his report declined to lend himself to campaign exigencies would speedily be invited to tender his resignation, and if he did not do it, he would find himself superseded by a new appointee.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from West Virginia?
Mr. MONEY. Certainly.
Mr. ELKINS. Speaking of the political feature of the case, is not the Commissioner of Labor now appointed by the President, and is it not a political appointment? Does it not change with changing Administrations?

Mr. HALE. No; it does not.
Mr. MONEY. It has not changed.
Mr. ELKINS. The office is not held for life.
Mr. MONEY. It does not change with the change of Administration.

Mr. ELKINS.

Mr. ELKINS. Why not? It may. Mr. MONEY. It continues during Democratic and Republican Administrations. The work has been thoroughly nonpartisan, and it was made an independent department in order that it should

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; but the head of it—
Mr. MONEY. And if it had not been so the demand of labor interests would not have been met.

The head of the Department changes. It has not changed. Mr. ELKINS.

Mr. MONEY.

Mr. ELKINS. It can be.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, it can be, but it has not been; and it has not been changed because it was not intended to be a political office. Every single other officer in this Government who could be made political has been made political. We know that political influences have dominated the Navy and the Army, which should not have any political influence at all. Some of us believe that political influence have dominated the nave that political influence at all. ical influences have dominated more than once a great coordinate branch of this Government in rendering decisions upon the most branch of this Government in rendering decisions upon the most important matters that ever came before the American public. Wherever politics can intrude itself it has done so.

Here are the laboring people of the country, who have an independent department to meet their wishes, to give out impartial statistics and information to guide and regulate them as well as the capital with which they come in conflict. A conflict must forever and ever go on between capital and organized labor. I say necessarily, not that there need be any injury done by one to the other, but the interests naturally conflict. One wants what he can get and the other wants to keep what he has, and consequently the two will always be in natural conflict. The part of this Congress is to try, if possible, to be a buffer between these two hostile elements, and to enact such legislation as will prevent any outbreak or such a divergence of interests as will lead to conflict of the most serious character between capital and labor.

One of the things proposed was an independent and nonpartisan bureau of labor, and it has acted, so far as I know, and I have examined its reports with great interest, in that nonpartisan capacity. Its function has been performed impartially. It has met the demand of the laboring people of this country; it has met the demand of the laboring people of this country; it has been satisfactory to all concerned, and I see no necessity for, but on the contrary I see a great evil in, putting that independent department in another department, to be subjected to the will of a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics and as a political chief appointed on account of his politics.

We all know that the mere department work of a Secretary is as purely perfunctory as anything can be. He can not read the papers he signs, and he can not sign half of those which bear his name. A boy with a rubber stamp imprints the Secretary's name upon papers he never saw and never will see. It is the necessity of the service. It is due to the multiplication of business that comes from the enormous aggregation of population and an enormous increase of wealth, and which comes with such leaps and bounds that it can not be estimated for in the annual estimates for appropriations submitted by the several heads of departments. partments.

Now, Senators, you who vote to put this Department under a political chief (and you will know you are doing it when you vote that way) will not have put under obligations any single one of the labor organizations or the independent working people of this country. You know very well that they do not want a political chief to handle their statistics. Gentlemen may say figures will not lie, but it depends entirely upon the men who handle the figures whether or not they will lie. They can lie well enough if they are in the hands of a liar, and they can pervert the truth when they are in the hands of a partisan.

I do not claim that I am the champion of the laboring people of this country. I am not here with a commission from the laboring people, but I am here sympathetic with all the working people of this country and other countries, the people who create the wealth and pay the taxes and fight the battles. While I am without any commission from them or anyone else or any expectation with respect to the matter, I am here to say that when this clause is voted into the pending bill you will have destroyed the interest which the laboring people have in this Department; you will have nullified its usefulness, and you will have made it a part of the machinery of the political conduct of this Government which they believe is inimical in its influence to their interests.

Bureau, he says, under political influence has deteriorated. I have known a good many heads of that Bureau. I once had the pleasure of examining one of them, a distinguished scientist, since transferred to a better and higher field of usefulness; and I wish to say that I do not know a more accomplished gentleman than the one who now presides over the Coast and Geodetic Survey. I believe it will be to the interest of the country, if this bill is to become a law, that that Bureau should be transferred to the department of commerce.

The whole motive, the whole reason, for establishing a coast and geodetic survey at all was to assist commerce. Its business is to survey, plat, chart, and mark the coasts of rivers and harbors in this country and all other countries touched by our commerce; and in that instance—

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Missississis a greatier.

sippi a question. Mr. MONEY.

Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. If your argument is good with respect to a nonpolitical, nonpartisan, independent Bureau of Labor, let us get a more efficient, nonpartisan, nonpolitical service in all directions than we have at present. If that argument is good with respect to the Commissioner of Labor, it is good for every other bureau. We might better and purify and hold the Administration aloof from politics if we would put every other bureau of this Government upon the same footing that the Labor Bureau is. If your argument is good as to the Commissioner of Labor, and it is an able argument, I admit, why not treat all the rest in the

Mr. MONEY. I take pleasure in answering the very pertinent inquiry of my friend the Senator from West Virginia. He is one of those gentlemen who will take a whole loaf or no bread. I am satisfied with a crumb. You know it is impossible to take the of those gentlemen who will take a whole loaf or no bread. I am satisfied with a crumb. You know it is impossible to take the departments out of politics. It was never intended that they should be out of politics. It belongs to the system of this country. It is institutional. The President must have political advisers, and he must call those to the head of the great departments who are in sympathy with him, and who approve his policy and will advise him, because the great party which elects him to his place expects him to appoint people who are in accord with his views and the views of the party which elected him. And, as suggested to me by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], he always does it.

But here is a bureau which in spite of that just and necessary rule has been created and maintained in the fashion in which we now find it, because of the demand of the plain people, who care nothing about politics and who are more interested in winning bread for their families than they are in the success of any party whatever, and therefore, I am sorry to say, show a readiness to shift en masse from one side to another as they may think their bread and meat depend. In recent campaigns thousands of ballots have meat depend. In recent campaigns thousands of ballots have gone into Republican ballot boxes cast by workingmen who did not believe in the principles enunciated by that party, but who thought that bread and meat for their wives and children depended upon the votes they cast. The capitalists who threatened them did not intend to perform. They were a lot of cowards. They raised their hands to strike, but did not have the courage to give the law areas if these peaks are not read independently. blow, even if those men had gone on and voted independently, everyone of them, for Mr. Bryan. But the capitalists knew the threat was sufficient. They had their hooks in the gills of these people, and the latter could not help themselves.

In spite of the fact that the departments must generally be political that their heads must obey the President of the United litical, that their heads must obey the President of the United States, that they must be in accord with him or leave (and they should be asked to leave if they show an unwillingness to do so) should be asked to leave it they show an unwillingness to do so), here we have a department which if it can not be made nonpartisan and nonpolitical should be abolished and should not be provided for in any bill or transferred to any other department. When it can no longer be independent and nonpartisan and impartial, then it should at once be extinguished, and not coddled and made the subject of transfer and of debate in this Chamber.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to repeat what I said a while ago, that I do not represent any labor organization whatever. They have never asked me to be their champion, but I can see what the effect of this is and I believe I know the influence and motive that prompt it. They are to destroy the last impartial source of statistics and information which the Government has to-day upon matters of most vital importance as relating to capital and labor, and I tell you that the people, after a while, will tire of this sort of business, this interference in the only affair in which they have sought to be directly represented.

nullified its usefulness, and you will have made it a part of the machinery of the political conduct of this Government which they believe is inimical in its influence to their interests.

Now, Mr. President, here is the Coast and Geodetic Survey, mentioned by the distinguished Senator from Missouri. That render to the people of this country just, impartial, fair, and non-partisan statistics and information for their guidance and their

Mr. GALLINGER. Before my friend the Senator from Mississippi takes his seat I should like to say a word. I always respect his opinions, and I always listen to his eloquence with great pleasure. I wish, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, to give the Senator an opportunity to disclaim—which I am sure he will gladly do-any imputation upon the committee that their purpose in reporting this bill was to destroy this last nonpartisan bureau or department of Government. The Senator says he thinks he understands the influences that are back of it and that led somebody to propose this wicked thing. I am sure the Senator did not mean to suggest that the committee had that end in view when they reported the bill including the Department of Labor.

Mr. MONEY. I am very much obliged to my distinguished friend the Senator from New Hampshire for bringing this matter to my attention. I perhaps went too far in saying that, for I can not believe that the Democrats on the committee could have had any such motive. But I do believe that the Republican party are animated by that motive. They have the controlling vote here, and I have seen nowhere along the whole line of progress anything that tended to make for the good of the masses of this country.

Mr. GALLINGER. My only answer to that is that it must interest the country to have the championship of the labor of this country placed in the hands of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. Whether the country is interested or not is a matter so immaterial to me that it is hardly worth mentioning. At any rate, I have risen in my place without any sort of thought upon this bill at all, not expecting to say a single word upon it, but I accidentally came in and heard the remarks delivered by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Missouri, which called my mind at once the remarks I have indulged in here; and if I have reflected upon anybody in any way I am perfectly willing to withdraw it. But what I make is a charge against the Republican party. It may be I am quite mistaken about this thing; I lican party. It may be I am quite mistaken about this thing; I consider that I am as fallible as anybody else; but when I take this in connection with all the other movements of this sort I am compelled to believe that the intention is that it shall all be under political control.

Now, the very situation as it stands, the way in which the Bureau was organized, the purpose for which it was organized, the demand that was made for its organization, the character of its appointment, its standing through successive and changing Administrations of different politics, all show to me that the intention was, as I said, to have a nonpartisan bureau of statistics and information for the benefit of the wage-earners and the laboring people of this country, as well as the capitalists and manufacturers of this country. It was made an independent department under a Democratic Administration, and the head of it, so far as I know, is a Republican, appointed by a Democratic President. Everything connected with it tends to show that it was to act independently of any political influence or motive, and so far it has been properly administered.

Mr. President, we are not accustomed here to say anything that will purposely wound anyone, and I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not think that there is any personal reflection upon him or any member of the committee on either side. I have too much regard for all of the Senators to be at all discourteous or impolite to any one of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Knowing the kind heart of the Senator, and claiming for myself equal kindness of heart, I gladly withdraw any suggestion I made that may have been offensive to the

Mr. MONEY. It was not at all offensive to me.
Mr. GALLINGER. I thought this matter ought to be discussed absolutely without reference to political views or partisan politics, and I am sure the committee had that in view. They may have made mistakes, but they certainly had no purpose of harming the Department of Labor or doing anything that would harm the laboring people of this country. I think the Senator will agree that that is so.

Mr. MONEY. I stated at the time that I was obliged to the Senator for bringing me to that point, and I did not intend to be sarcastic when I said it. I was honest about it. I really was obliged to him; and I am obliged to him for his further remark. I will say now that I accept entirely his disclaimer on the part of the committee of any intention to impair the efficiency of this particular bureau which affects the labor of the country, either organized or unorganized; but I have attempted to point out, trespective of the politics of the committee or of the majority, the effect of the measure. Ex necessitate rei. It can not be helped. The probabilities are all on my side of the argument. You can not put a bureau under a political department and make it independent and nonpartisan, unless it is strictly a scientific one. In that case it might be possible. But when it comes to the Supreme Court of the United States, when it comes to the Army and Navy, when it comes to any of the executive departments of and Navy, when it comes to any of the executive departments of this Government, we all know and feel that political influence ramifies every single branch of the service, military and civil. It has shown itself so repeatedly and so persistently that it is impossible for anyone, however dull, to ignore the fact.

I am not here to arraign anybody. It might have been just so if Democrats were in the ascendency. It is the fate of this country to be tossed between two political parties and to take the color feeth in overwhereach of the corrier and it is real-vice read.

of each in every branch of the service, and it is perhaps important that it should be so in part, but not altogether. I wish were more perfect, Mr. President; but I think we are about to demonstrate to the world that we are incapable of self-government in the high sense of the word as it was conceived by the people who established this Republic. I know that in the convention which organized this great Government the highest and brightest minds did not believe the people capable of governing themselves.

I know that Alexander Hamilton, whose principles are espoused by the other side of the Chamber, said the nearer we could come to the monarchy of Great Britain the better for us; that it was impossible for the plain people to govern themselves; that it must be a government of the better class, the "better class" always meaning the people having money. I know that such a good man as Roger Sherman subscribed to that doctrine, and I am sorry to say that one James Madison, who has been called the champion of States rights, went very far in the same direction. And so to-day it is becoming more and more obvious that the people are not to speak for themselves. We need at least one grand, impartial, nonpartisan bureau or department that will give the facts in which they are concerned without any coloring or any direction from any political chief whatever.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, it seems to me unfortunate that any political complexion should be given to this debate. The subject under consideration seems to me of such dignity and importance that it ought to be considered entirely apart from any mere party or partisan consideration. But if I were here as the champion of labor, I would feel constrained to suggest, sir, that labor has some very injudicious friends on this floor.

What is it proposed to do by this bill? It seems to be the fundamental principle in the thought of the promoters of this measure that there is a decided advantage in having a direct representation in the executive branch of this Government through a secretary who is there affiliated with and attached to the very central head of the Government. Now, are the promoters of this bill mistaken in that regard? If not, what does it mean when gentlemen suggest that here shall be a great department organized to take jurisdiction of the industrial and manufacturing and commercial interests and leave labor out? How is it possible, Mr. President, that there can be any comprehensive or systematic organization of those great industrial interests and leave labor

When my friends on the other side of the Chamber propose to leave this Bureau out it seems to me they are doing a doubtful service to the laboring man and the laboring interests of this country. They propose that labor should dwell in a tent on the We propose to bring the labor interests right into the mansion alongside of commerce, alongside of capital, where they belong, that they may dwell there harmoniously together; that the Labor Bureau shall not be an orphan, entirely discredited and unaffiliated. It appears to me that no scheme of this kind can be complete unless we include both and treat them alike and bring them under the same department, where they may have equal representation in the great central executive department of the Government.

Now, it is true that in the Army there is a certain advantage Now, it is true that in the Army there is a certain advantage that an independent commander has. A guerrilla has an advantage in the same way. His force is mobile; he can move about without consulting superior officers. But, Mr. President, that advantage fades away when we come to consider the great military desirability of organization. The same thing applies here. It seems to me, Mr. President, that if we should leave labor out of this bill it would be an invidious discrimination against labor. Therefore it ameers to me to be very desirable that the labor. Therefore it appears to me to be very desirable that the amendment shall not prevail and that the bill shall be considered on broad grounds, not on narrow partisan lines, but with a view of organizing a great systematic department, including all the interests which combine to make our great industrial develop-

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I agree fully with the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES]. It does seem to me that this bill lifts up labor and dignifies it. It puts its interests into better hands and safeguards them better than can be done by having an independent bureau—a mere bureau. I do not understand the argument of the Senators who are expressed to understand the argument of the Senators who are opposed to merging this bureau into the department of commerce when we are willing to call it the department of labor, if you please, thereby giving it more importance. The fact is that it was in the minds of the promoters of this bill, those who considered it, that the great labor question and the interests of labor would be better cared for, better safeguarded, than at present, and we are not willing to permit the other side to have or pretend to have more in-terest in the question of labor than this side of the Chamber. We think labor is important enough to have something more than a mere bureau. It is large enough to be in the hands of a Cabinet officer and receive the best attention that a Cabinet officer can give it.

I am glad that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money] has taken into his particular charge the labor of the South. This is a new departure. It is gratifying that we find that Southern statesmen are beginning to love and care for labor in the South as well as in the North and all over the country. If I thought that the labor of the South would be better promoted by this independent by the south would be southern as a confidence of the south would be southern. pendent bureau that some Senators are so infatuated with, I would vote against putting it in the department of commerce. There is no disposition to strike down the Labor Bureau, no disposition to impair it, but every disposition to promote the interests of labor by putting the Labor Bureau in the department of

There is no way to get around responsible government. All the public business ought to belong to some department, ought to be taken care of in some department, responsible to some head. There should be no independent bureaus under the Government. I dislike very much to see the Fish Commission merged into the department of commerce. The head of that Bureau-a personal friend-wants in every way to keep it out of the department of commerce, and I can understand the reason. It is better to be in a camp by yourself, in a command controlled by one's self, responsible to nobody, as the Fish Commission is, but to the President; and, I understand, the Commissioner of Labor is responsible to nobody but the President. In the multifarious duties that rest upon the shoulders of the President he can not give these bureaus any attention whatever, and for this reason we believe that it is any attention whatever, and for this reason we believe that it is better to put them in the hands of a responsible Cabinet officer, notwithstanding the claim of the political complexion that might attach to the administration of the Labor Bureau.

There should be no difference between the great political parties of this country and between Senators here about the interests of labor. Everybody in the country—every Senator here—wants to promote its interests. This bill has the unanimous vote, I believe, of the Committee on Commerce. I believe one of the controlling reasons was that it would help labor; that it would help the great labor interests of the country; that labor interests would have more and better attention. Labor and the interests of labor would be lifted up and dignified by belonging to a great department of the Government than to a bureau, as now.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words about the proposition that is pending. As I understand it, the about the proposition that is pending. As I understand it, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pettus] to strike out so much of the bill as puts in this new department of commerce the Labor Bureau as now organized.

I regret very much to have heard political considerations mentioned in this connection. As a member of the committee that reported this bill I feel that I can, with perfect safety, say not a member of that committee, Democratic member or Republican member, thought of politics once from the beginning to the end of the consideration given the matter in the committee.

I will say further that I regret an important business measure like this is can not be considered in the Senate without having the suspicion of political motive brought in. I feel so absolutely free of being actuated by that motive myself, and I have seen so little to justify the suspicion as against any other person in the committee or outside of the committee, that I feel constrained to say that I believe the suggestions made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money] can not find a place in the facts surrounding this matter.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will permit me, I do not know whether he was in the Hall during the whole of my speech or not, but when my attention was brought to this matter by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gal-LINGER], I promptly acquitted the Democratic side; and when he went a little further and I was pressed a little by him in a goodnatured way, I said that I would acquit the committee; and then, dropping all motives, I discussed the subject purely upon what I consider the necessary consequence of placing a nonpartisan bureau under a political department. I am sure the Senator need not feel at all aggrieved at anything I said. Of course I disclaim any intention of offending anybody or doing a discourtesy to anybody.

Mr. MARTIN. I can assure the Senator from Mississippi that

Mr. MARTIN. I can assure the Senator from Mississippi that I did not feel aggrieved at all. I heard all he said, and I wish simply to confirm the conclusion of the views that he last expressed when he exonerated, as I wish to exonerate, the committee and every Senator, so far as I know, on the floor of the Senate from any consideration of a political nature in connection with this matter.

I will say further that I have been unable to see the force of I will say further that I have been unable to see the force of the argument made by the Senator from Mississippi in respect to the present nonpartisan organization and his fears that the new organization would be partisan. If the present organization of the Labor Bureau is nonpartisan, if its work has been done fairly and justly without any partisan bias, a fortiori, it will be with-out partisan bias when put under this greater command, this more important officer, both that important officer and the pres-ent officer in charge of the Bureau holding commissions from the same head the President of the United States. If it has been non-ent officer in charge of the Bureau holding commissions from the same head, the President of the United States. If it has been non-partisan in the past, it is due to the Administration now in power. If that Administration has made it nonpartisan in the past, why may it not make it nonpartisan in the future? It is absolutely under the control of the President of the United States as now constituted. I apprehend it is not any more partisan or any less partisan than other departments of the Government. There is partisan than other departments of the Government. There is no law to make it less partisan than the other departments of the Government. If it is less partisan than other departments, I say it is the act of the President. He has appointed a good man at the head of that Bureau, and I hope the present President and all future Presidents will continue to appoint a good man to take charge of it when it is a part of the department of commerce, as well as when it is an independent bureau.

As I said, I am unable to see the force of the argument of the Senator from Mississippi to the effect that it is a nonpartisan Bureau now and would be a partisan Bureau when it is made a part of the new department of commerce. It is as susceptible of partisan motive in the one instance as in the other. It is as much subject now, I have no doubt, to partisan feeling as any other department of the Government. I have seen no undue partisanship in it, and I hope I may never do so; but I say it is as susceptible to partisan conduct now as it will be when it is made a part of the bureau of the department of commerce.

of the bureau of the department of commerce.

Now, another argument has been adduced in favor of the motion to strike this Bureau from the new department of commerce by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], who says: "Let well enough alone." Mr. President, that argument may be used as against every single bureau attempted to be put into this new department. Are we to make charges against a bureau before it can be fixed in any one department or another of the Govern-Are we to charge incompetency of management before we ment? Are we to charge incompetency of management before we can justify ourselves in putting any independent bureau in this new department? If it has done well in the past, I say it will do better in the future when it has a Cabinet officer to foster it and to care for it and build it up.

Again, Mr. President, it has been said by the Senator from Georgia that if no other consideration had controlled him he would have been controlled by the letter from Mr. Gompers, the president of the Federation of Labor. Mr. President, I feel that the letter of Mr. Gompers is an argument in favor of the transfer, so far as it contains any argument. Mr. Gompers objects to having this bureau put in the department of commerce because he says that there should be a Cabinet officer to have sole and exclusive control of this Labor Bureau. Mr. Gompers wants the Labor Bureau magnified into a Cabinet position, single and alone. We must limit the number of Cabinet officers. We can not have a Cabinet officer for the department of manufactures; a Cabinet officer for the Department of Labor; a Cabinet officer for the department of statistics. We can not multiply Cabinet officers in-definitely. We must classify them, or should, in my humble judgment, classify them so as to include every bureau of the Government under some Cabinet department, except in the case of a few, which can not well be brought under Cabinet control.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is a quasi-judicial tribunal in some of its features. It should not be embraced under a Cabinet officer. It should be independent. I feel that that is an exception. I believe that the Civil Service Commission should be independent, because it deals with all departments of the Government service. I can not at the moment think of any others; but there may be some others. However, as a general proposi-tion, for the efficient administration of the business of the Government I believe that every bureau should be classified under some Cabinet officer and should be controlled by a Cabinet officer in direct communication with the President and directly responsible to the President. For that reason I believe that the Labor Bureau should be put under some one of these Cabinet officers, and I know of none to which that Bureau more logically belongs

I have desired, Mr. President, briefly to express these views, because I sincerely believe that the best interests of this Bureau will be promoted by having it made a part of and put under the direction of the department of commerce.

Mr. SPOONER, Mr. President, this bill day by day is growing in popularity. I know of no one in the Senate who has not announced himself as in favor of it, but from day to day there is a a little change in the quality of its popularity. Everyone, taking the Senate altogether, seems to be in favor of creating this new department, but opposed to putting anything in it. [Laughter.] One Senator wants the Fish Commission taken out because it is "scientific." Another wants the Geological Survey taken out, "scientific." Another wants the Geological Survey taken out, partly for the same reason. One wanted the Coast and Geodetic Survey taken out, which is certainly quite scientific in its functions, and out it went.

Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me? Mr. MONEY.

Mr. SPOONER. Always.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator looked at me as one who wanted the Coast and Geodetic Survey taken out.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I acquit the Senator.
Mr. MoNEY. I said I wanted it kept in where it belongs, and it has no business with any other department.
Mr. SPOONER. Another wanted the Census Bureau taken out, and out it went. Now it is proposed to take out the Department of Labor. Two or three friends of mine, who are connected with these bureaus, have asked me to move to strike those out of the bill, and I suppose, if the motion is made, they will go out. So there will not be much left of this bill by the time we are through with it.

The speech of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin] was an extremely fair one, a broad one, and was calculated, in my judgment, to make for better public service. It was uninfluenced in any wise whatever by any political suspicion or possible political

I assume, Mr. President, if we are to create this department that we are not creating it for the purpose of adding a Cabinet officer. I suppose that, in transferring bureaus to this department, we are not to be influenced by the desire of the heads of the bureaus, by their personal pride, or a desire for continued independence. We create the department, if we create it at all, because the public interest demands it, and in determining the question what bureaus and subdepartments of the Government shall be embraced in this new department I think we should take no account what-ever of the wishes of the gentlemen at the head of them, but study and determine solely the question whether if transferred to this department they will render better service in the public interest

I think this department ought to be established. The departments are overloaded. The Interior Department is an empire. The same thing almost is true of the Treasury Department. There are a large number of bureaus in the Treasury Department which, in their nature, have no legitimate connection with that Department, but as we have grown and progressed those bureaus have been added by Congress and, of course, they have been put upon one department or another until now it is too true, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money] said, that Cabinet officers, several of them at least, are obliged in putting their signatures or their approval upon documents and papers, some of them important, to do it in a somewhat perfunctory manner. It is impossible under the present situation that it should be otherwise; it ought not to be so any more than is necessary.

The Cabinet officer is held responsible for every breach of duty in the various bureaus under him, for every particular piece of rascality, for all loose transactions and wastefulness, and it is not fair to a Cabinet officer, it is not in the public interest, that a department should be so filled with bureaus as to render it impossible for the head of that department to keep a fair degree of supervision over the operations of the bureaus under him and to keep in fair degree in touch with those operations. It is ridiculous to suppose that as we advance and increase in our population, now 80,000,000; as we increase in domestic and foreign commerce, and as we increase in transportation facilities, growing in every conceivable way, the old machine is adequate to the new situation.

So I have felt that there ought to be created this new department; that the public interest absolutely demands it; and that we ought to transfer from the overloaded Departments—all of them are not overloaded—those bureaus and subdepartments, if there are such, which, massed in a department of commerce, can discharge just as efficiently the duties imposed upon those bureaus by law when placed under the general supervision and responsibility of a Cabinet officer. That is what this bill was intended to do.

This Department of Labor—I have not cared much about it in this connection, although in establishing a department of commerce, dealing with our industries, dealing with our domestic commerce, intended in various ways to promote both, dealing with our foreign commerce, dealing with every subject into which labor enters—naturally was by the committee deemed appropriate to be transferred to the department of commerce.

What argument is made against it here? First, it is said that it is an independent department. In a sense, yes. It is not a bureau in any department, nor is it an executive department. Why was it so created? To secure nonpartisanship, and, as Senators think, therefore, honest administration. I do not undertake to say as to that, but I do know this, that when the Bureau was created and the gentleman who now is at the head of the was created and the gentleman who now is at the head of the Department of Labor was first appointed, he was appointed at the head of the Labor Bureau. I ask my friend from Colorado [Mr. Teller] if I am mistaken about that. That was a bureau in the Interior Department, was it not?

Mr. TELLER. The Department of Labor?

Mr. SPOONER. No, I mean the Labor Bureau at first.

Mr. TELLER. I will state that I said whilst I was on the floor it was cricinally organized as the Bureau of Labor in 1884.

it was originally organized as the Bureau of Labor in 1884.

Mr. SPOONER. In what department?
Mr. BACON. In the Interior Department. In 1888 the act was amended, taking it out from that Department and making it an independent department.

Mr. SPOONER. I thank the Senator for confirming my recollection.

Has it ever been charged, Mr. President, that while the Bureau of Labor was a bureau in the Interior Department it was dishonest for political purposes in the administration of the functions imposed upon it by law? Was the distinguished gentleman, who is now at the head of this anomalous Department, any the less able as a statistician, any the less honest as a statistician, when he was at the head of a bureau in one of the Executive Departments than he has since been?

The Geological Survey is one of the bureaus of a department. It is in the Department of the Interior. A very able man is at the head of it. It deals with statistical investigations, and of the most important kind, Mr. President, very elaborate and far-reaching. It reports the results of statistical research to the country. Has it been claimed that that Bureau ever has been disabled in the discharge of its duty by the fact that the head of the department happened to belong to one party or the other? I

The Census Office is a bureau in the Interior Department. have heard charges made against the Census Bureau in connection with patronage, but I do not remember to have heard an impeachment of the statistical work of the Census Bureau upon the hypothesis that it was influenced by politics.

The gentleman who is now at the head of the Department of Labor has been retained through different Administrations. Because he was independent of the President? Not at all; for the act which created the Department, under which he was appointed, provides that the President may appoint him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. There has never been a day since he was first appointed when he was not subject to removal and when the President was not at liberty to substitute for him a man of his own resident faith. man of his own political faith.

It has not been done. President Cleveland did not do it; President Harrison did not do it; President Cleveland, when he came dent Harrison did not do it; President Cleveland, when he came in again, did not do it; President McKinley did not do it. Why? Because every right-thinking citizen of the United States charged with public duties and fit to hold public office, knows that the statistical information that reveals to the people our growth, the condition of our industries—general statistical information—must be honest in order to be of any use or value, and I never expect to see a President elected who will put a tool in such a position or who may be expected to be willing to so president a be position. may be expected to be willing to so prostitute his position as to give political coloring to investigations of this sort and to the collection and compilation and report of statistical information.

If this Bureau is transferred, the gentleman who has held the place by "divine right," in a sense, because of his surpassing excellence as a statistician, for he is wedded to the science and could not give a thought to politics in the administration of that important function-

Mr. TELLER. What is his politics?
Mr. SPOONER. I do not know.
Mr. TELLER. Does anybody else know?
Mr. SPOONER. I do not know nor do I care. He was first appointed, I think, by a Republican President, was he not?
Mr. ALLISON. He was appointed by a Republican President.
Mr. TELLER. When I interrupted the Senator from Wisconsin I did not wear to east our medication was Mr. Wright the sin I did not mean to cast any reflection upon Mr. Wright, the sin I did not mean to cast any reflection upon Mr. Wright, the head of the Department of Labor.

Mr. SPOONER. I know you did not.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe anybody knows what his politics is. He has attended to his business, and let politics alone.

Mr. SPOONER. So with the Geological Survey, and so with others. I doubt not it will be found, no matter what you call them, no matter if the departments or subdepartments or bureaus are transferred to the new department of commerce the work. are transferred to the new department of commerce, the work will go on just as it has gone on.

The present Commissioner of Labor can not expect to live forever. He is to have successors. I hope they may be as able and faithful as he, and I am not willing to believe that a day will come when any President—Democrat or Republican—will choose the head of that Department to conduct that important work with reference to anything but his ability and willingness to get at the truth

The proposition here is to transfer this Department and other departments with the same officers, with the same rank, at the same salaries, and with the same duties now imposed upon them by law. It is a little odd to have independent and unassimilated bureaus in the Government. Prima facie there is propriety in almost every case in having these bureaus, whatever they may be, almost every case in having these bureaus, whatever they may be, or these subdepartments, whatever they may deal with, in some executive department, presided over by a Cabinet officer, who twice a week or every day visits the Chief Executive, who is responsible for the general conduct of the Administration.

I agree with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] in all he said, and especially I agree with him that there are peculiar reasons why the Interstate Commerce Commission should not be transferred to a department. The Interstate Commerce Commissioners are charged with the administration of an act of Conmissioners are charged with the administration of an act of Conmissioners are charged with the administration of an act of Congress. It is part of their function to investigate, with a view to enforcing the requirements of the interstate-commerce law, but enforcing the requirements of the interstate-commerce law, but a part, and an important part, of their functions are quasi judicial.

Mr. HALE. Is not that true about any bureau of importance in any department of the Government?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think it is true.

Mr. HALE. The Indian Bureau in the Interior Department is engaged in administering the law. There is not a day in the great Land Office of the Interior Department when questions of law do not come up which involve hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars. Indeed, I have heard it said that the decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office yearly involve more value in property than those of any court which exists in the United States. The Interstate Commerce Commission was authorized to do nothing more than that. It is a projected body in the United States. The Interstate Commerce Commission was authorized to do nothing more than that. It is a projected body onto the administration of the Government.

They have no force so far as promulgating decisions which are recognized as law. Their duties are purely administrative, purely with regard to seeing that the different laws in reference to railway transportation and interstate commerce are carried out. Everything about it could be done by a well-developed and well-conducted bureau in a department as well as it is done now.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that if the Senator will read the inter-

Mr. HALE. I have read it.
Mr. SPOONER. Which he has evidently forgotten—
Mr. HALE. Oh, no.
Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will find the Interstate Commerce Commissioners are rather sui generis. Of course they are "projected onto the Administration" just as every other bureau that has ever been created was "projected onto the Administra-

Mr. HALE. No doubt it is the natural habit of all officials to amplify their jurisdiction, as it is the habit of judges to amplify theirs. I have no doubt that these Commissioners naturally would like to enlarge their jurisdiction, and they perhaps have at-tempted it, but the courts have sat down upon them very conclu-sively, and have determined that they had no power to promulgate legal decisions.

Mr. SPOONER. But they do make decisions, and they are entitled to apply to the courts for injunctions in certain cases, and the courts compel the attendance of witnesses.

Mr. HALE. Every officer of the Government can do that.

Mr. SPOONER. But every officer can not compel the attendance of witnesses

Mr. HALE. But officers may apply to the courts. Mr. SPOONER. That is a little different. That distinguishes them from quasi courts.

Mr. HALE. Committees of Congress do that.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes; when they are within their jurisdic-

Mr. HALE. Those are not considered great judicial powers.
Mr. SPOONER. I did not say anything about "great judicial powers." Whether they "enjoy" quasi-judicial powers I do not undertake to say, but they have quasi-judicial functions.
Mr. HALE. But what infects me with a kind of skepticism about all this is the entire ease with which Senators, as to a particular body in the Government, a bureau or a department, find that it ought to be put under one head, and the same Senators.

that it ought to be put under one head, and the same Senators upon other matters, other bureaus, other departments, and other organizations, think they ought not to be put under one head.

I do not see, if you take the Fish Commission—purely an independent body, with no relation whatever to the department of commerce, which was started as a bureau of the Smithsonian

Institution under Professor Baird, purely scientific, and for the purpose of developing the fish product—I do not see why that should be put into the department of commerce; and that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which deals with commerce and with questions arising out of commerce, should not be put into it. I can not work my mind in that way. I have not got that facility which the Senator from Wisconsin has.

Mr. SPOONER. That is evident. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. Yes, it is evident to me; and it is a matter of some repining on my part that I can not work my mind in that way—first this way and then that—with reference to different bureaus and different departments of the Government.

and different departments of the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. I should be very sorry for the Senator—
Mr. HOAR. I want to ask a question, with the permission of the Senator. I will put it in that form, as that is the only right I have to interrupt him. I merely want to make a suggestion.

It seems to me that the Interstate Commerce Commission is practically a judicial body. It is true its members are removable by the President, just as Territorial judges are removable by the President. But it promulgates decisions on the hearing of evidence and argument, and that is its chief business, which, when promulgated, become the general rule governing the conduct of great transactions in all like cases; and its function, operation, quality, and character are judicial. It settles judicially not the case between two individual parties, but the general rule of conduct which governs great corporations in the great sphere of human transactions for all men when those questions come before the Commission for decision.

the Commission for decision.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me a moment?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. Money. Mr. President, it may be a little rash for me to arise in the presence of the very learned chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. Hoar], but I do not consider anybody a court whose judgments are not final and can not be enforced. The Interstate Commerce Commission renders no final judgments.

The rules of commerce, which the Senator says are a kind of decision, are not like the decisions of a court of law. It is simply a quasi judicial body, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Sponer] says, which can determine the application of the interstate-commerce law to the conduct of railroad corporations. When the Commission gives an opinion it gives a finding of fact; but if you want a remedy, you must go to another body, you must go to a court. But no body, however judicial its functions may be, is a court unless its judgments are final or appealable to some court whose judgment is final.

Mr. HOAR. Is that not merely a technical statement? I am

Mr. HOAR. Is that not merely a technical statement? I am speaking of the practical results.

Mr. MONEY. I mean that.

Mr. HOAR. It is true that these Commissioners, just as the railroad commissioners in some States, have to go to court if their decision is disputed, but their judgment is adopted in practice as that of a court. These men declare the general law which prevails in all such cases. Their whole conduct, the mode of hearing evidence and arguments and sitting impartially, is that of a judicial tribunal, although it is true, as the Senator says, that, if disputed, their decisions have to be enforced by a court. It is, however, none the less a fact that their function is a judicial function, and that the result is a judicial result.

Mr. MONEY. I do not like to trespass upon the Senator from Wisconsin; but as his time is unlimited, I hope he will allow me wisconsin; but as installed is unlimited, I hope he will allow me to say that I know whereof I speak regarding the Interstate Commerce Commission, because I have had experience in a case in which I myself appeared before the Commission. They made a finding that was absolutely disregarded and has never yet been enforced because the parties to the case were not willing or able to carry it to a court where they could get a judgment that could be enforced. Practically it is not a court. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Wisconsin yielded the floor?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know. Have I, Mr. President? [Laughter.]
Mr. MONEY. I interrupted the Senator by permission, as I understood. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I remember, I think, that when I sat down my mind was agitated over the mental condition of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who seemed to think that I must be in favor of putting all the departments into this bill or opposed to putting any of them into this bill.

Mr. HALE. Or bureaus.

Mr. SPOONER. Or bureaus. In other words, the Senator seems to be unable to understand how, with any degree of mental soundness, I could be in favor of incorporating or transferring to this department of commerce some bureaus, and not others.

I think I put it differently from that.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President—
Mr. HALE. I think I said that I could not understand how it Mr. HALE. I think I said that I could not understand how it was that the Senator was in favor of putting a bureau which has nothing to do with commerce into this new department and against putting into it a bureau or an organization which has nothing to do except as to commerce. That was my trouble of mind. There is where I lacked the alertness to keep up with the Senator, and there is where he should commiserate me.

Mr. SPOONER. I commiserate the Senator generally, and I commiserate myself because I do not agree with the Senator.

[Laughter.]

I was giving reasons to show why, although the Interstate Commission has to do with commerce, I thought it ought to be an independent commission, and that it was intended to be so. I have not the time to take up the interstate-commerce law, but I will undertake to show the Senator that there is a very wide distinctional to the commerce of the comme tinction, which I think even he will concede, between the Inter-state Commerce Commission, so far as this question is concerned, and the Fish Commission, which the Senator interjected into my remarks

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I make an inquiry?
Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; everybody may make an inquiry.
Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What does the Senator think would be the effect on the efficiency of the Interstate Commerce Commission if it should be transferred from its present somewhat independent position?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the tendency would be to destroy it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think so, too.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is the object. No; I will not say that; but I think it would have that effect.

Mr. President, I think the Department of Labor either ought to be transferred to the proposed department of commerce or I think the bill ought to be very carefully amended or considerably changed, one or the other.

The Bureau of Statistics is made by this bill to perform this function:

It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad—domestic and foreign.

That looks like a repetition.

Mr. HALE. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. SPOONER. I am reading from section 5 of the bill. Mr. HALE. Is that a department or a bureau?

Mr. SPOONER. The bill reads:

It shall be the province and duty of said bureau.

I shall read from the beginning of the section:

That there shall be in the department of commerce a bureau to be called a bureau of manufactures, and a chief of said bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate—

That is the one.

Mr. SPOONER. My argument reaches substantially that.

It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information concerning such industries and such markets, and by such other methods and means as may be prescribed by the secretary or provided by law.

That makes it the duty of this bureau, under the direction of the secretary, to obtain statistics relating to our domestic com-merce, to our foreign commerce, to the condition of our indus-merce, to our foreign commerce, to the condition of our indus-tries, and within the general scope which is here prescribed.

This was one reason why I thought the amendment of my col-league [Mr. QUARLES] ought to be adopted, to prevent the dupli-cation of the gathering of statistics, or, rather, the gathering of duplicate statistics, at great cost.

The Bureau of Statistics is transferred with the same duties.

Its chief shall

under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, annually prepare a report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries to the close of the fiscal year.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] read this yesterday:

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall prepare an annual statement of all merchandise passing in transit through the United States to foreign countries, each description of merchandise, so far as practicable, warehoused, withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, for exportation, for transportation to other districts, and remaining in the warehouse at the end of each fiscal year.

Then the law provides that-

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall collect, digest, and arrange, for the use of Congress, the statistics of the manufactures of the United States, their localities, sources of raw material, markets, exchanges with the producing regions of the country, transportation of products, wages, and such other conditions as are found to affect their prosperity.

It could not well be made any broader.

Now, when you turn to the duty of the Commissioner or head of the Department of Labor, you find that he is required by law to do this! It is proposed to keep it an independent department, charged by law with the same duties and functions now imposed upon it under the supervision of no Cabinet officer. In view of what I have read as to other statistical bureaus, I ask the Senate for a moment to listen to this:

That the Commissioner of Labor, in accordance with the general design and duties referred to in section 1 of this act—

Which are very large, being to-acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful informa-tion on subjects connected with labor, in the most general and comprehen-sive sense of that word, and especially upon its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promot-ing their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity.

Now, here are his duties:

To ascertain, at as early a date as possible, and whenever industrial changes shall make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States, in leading countries where such articles are produced, by fully specified units of production, and under a classification showing the different elements of cost, or approximate cost, of such articles of production, including the wages paid in such industries per day, week, month, or year, or by the piece; and hours employed per day; and the profits of the manufacturers and producers of such articles; and the comparative cost of living, and the kind of living.

More specific, but covered by the general language, is it not, of the other provision:

"It shall be the duty of the Commissioner also to ascertain and report as to the effect of the customs laws, and the effect thereon of the state of the currency, in the United States, on the agricultural industry, especially as to its effect on mortgage indebtedness of farmers;" and what articles are controlled by trusts or other combinations of capital, business operations, or labor, and what effect said trusts or other combinations of capital, business operations, or labor have on production and prices. He shall also establish a system of reports, by which, at intervals of not less than two years, he can report the general condition, so far as production is concerned, of the leading industries of the country. of the country.

And he does. Now, as we are going along, that should be changed so as to avoid a large duplication, at great expense, of the changed so as to avoid a large duplication, at great expense, of the statistics, or it should be transferred to the department of commerce, with authority in the Cabinet officer at the head of that department so to redistribute between the two bureaus, as was proposed by the amendment of my colleague, Mr. QUARLES, the duties as to gathering the statistics as to prevent duplication.

As the law stands now you have the Geological Survey, at great expense—as was stated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] the other day, and it is true—procuring statistics as to mining, and you find the same duty imposed upon this department. While I am in favor of the bill and believe in the creation of this new department, I think what particularly ought to engage the attention of the Senate now, if these various departments and bureaus are to be withheld from this department, where power is to be lodged to supervise and redistribute, so far as the gathering of statistics is concerned, is that some provision by amendment to this bill should be made which would prevent this duplication.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me for moment?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. What does the Senator say with reference to section 8 of the law, which directs the Commissioner to make reports to the President and to Congress and also to make reports on particular subjects when called on either by the President or by either House of Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. From what law does the Senator read?

Mr. BACON. The law creating the Department of Labor, which the Senator has been discussing. I think he has it before him.

He read the seventh section.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator mean the Department of Labor act? Mr. BACON. Yes, sir. The Senator read the seventh section and said there ought to be an amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I was dealing with the duties to show that they involved a duplication of statistics.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, and I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the present law requires the Commissioner of Labor to make reports to the President and to Congress and of Labor to make reports to the President and to Congress, and also when called upon by either the President or either House of Congress to make reports on particular subjects, and also to make to Congress an annual report as to the money expended. There is no provision in this bill as to whether or not these provisions shall remain in force. The question I desire to ask the learned Senator is whether in his view, if the Department of Labor is made a division of the department of commerce, the law should be changed in that regard, or whether it is the idea of the Senator that the duty of reporting directly to Congress is taken away from this Department?

Mr. SPOONER. I am not certain that the Senator from Georgia is right that there is no such provision in this bill.

Mr. BACON. Well, possibly not.

Mr. SPOONER. It says:

And provided further

Mr. BACON. It is not in that particular provision, but there may be some general provision.

Mr. SPOONER. It says:

And provided further. That all laws prescribing the work and defining the duties of the several bureaus, offices, departments—

That is drawn with reference to the inclusion of the Department or branches of the public service by this act transferred to and made a part of the department of commerce shall, so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, remain in full force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

I suppose under that it would be the duty of the head of the Department of Labor to transmit to Congress through the secretary of commerce the reports required by law.

Mr. BACON. Is it your idea that under the bill as now drawn, if it shall be enacted into law, these provisions would still be in force, and that the Commissioner would simply send his report through the head of the department rather than direct to Con-

Mr. SPOONER. That is my understanding.
Mr. BACON. There is no bureau or department of government—not one—which is a subordinate division of an executive department that reports to Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand that, but this bureau is transferred by the present bill with this provision:

That all officers, clerks, and employees now employed in any of the bureaus, offices, departments, or branches of the public service in this act transferred to the department of commerce are each and all hereby transferred to said department at their present grades and salaries, except where otherwise provided in this act.

Then follows the provision which makes them all subject to discharge the duties now imposed by law, except where qualified by this act. I discover nothing in this proposed act which repeals the law which imposes that plain duty upon the head of the Department of Labor, and I assumed in looking it over that it remains. I think perhaps it would be considered to be modified in this respect, under the rule which has always prevailed, that if either House of Congress desired special information from that department, it would direct the secretary of commerce to afford it

Mr. BACON. What would we do if the secretary of commerce declined?

Mr. SPOONER. What would we do if the head of the Bureau of Labor should decline?

Mr. BACON. I think we would deal with him.

Mr. SPOONER. How would you deal with him?
Mr. BACON. Well, if I had the votes of the Senate in my control I would deal with him very peremptorily.

Mr. SPOONER. How?

Mr. BACON. In the first place, I would not pay him any salary.

That would be one way to deal with him.

Mr. SPOONER. Could you not deal with the secretary in the

Mr. BACON. Certainly. I merely asked the Senator as a sort of side issue.

Mr. SPOONER. I have said all I care to say.

Mr. Mr. CUMBER. Mr. President, I have been listening to this debate with the hope of obtaining information as to some particular function, some power that was lodged in this new commerce department, whereby it could become necessary to attach to it certain of the other bureaus, and without which it would not have its power of action. Taking away from this bill certain statistical bureaus seemed to disturb the Senator from Wisconsin to a great extent, and he asked the pertinent question, What will there be left for the department of commerce if we take away each and all of these bureaus? Now, I might ask him, How do these bureaus all of these bureaus? assist him in any way simply by becoming a portion of this particular department? What power, what control, what authority has the new secretary of commerce over any of these bureaus which are to be placed under him and subordinate to that par-which are to be placed under him and subordinate to that particular department? I can not see that he has any such power.

To be sure, the bill says that the secretary is to foster and develop and promote our commerce; but how is he to do it? He is to do it simply by gathering statistics and reporting them. What is there to prevent his gathering those statistics from each of these separate bureaus where they are now located as well as though they were made part and parcel of his particular department? What is this department, anyway, but a mere statistical ment? What is this department, anyway, but a mere statistical body? What does it create? What does it promote? What does it control? Not even the commerce. It has no influence over it in any way except as it may report the statistics, and as an advisory arm of the Government. It controls nothing; it governs to be the control of the controls of the nothing. It simply reports, and that being the case it seems to me it is nothing more than a mere statistical bureau.

We can not say the same of the other departments. ury Department controls; it governs the matters that are particularly pertinent to it. The Interior Department has general control over interior affairs. The Indian Department is made a part of it and acts under its power and authority. It is one of the particular arms through which it carries out its power and assists it in performing its particular functions. That is not true, however, of this department.

Now, what rule should govern in determining what particular bureaus should come under and be made subordinate to the department of commerce? Certainly we must say it must be some-thing that is pertinent. I can not see any more reason for taking under this particular jurisdiction the Bureau of Labor than there would be for taking under it the whole Department of Agricul-ture. We can not have any commerce without our having agricultural exports.

Every one of those things has a certain connection with some other matter, and they are important connections; and if we are to determine it simply by the rule that there should go under and be subordinate to this new department everything which has any connection whatever with commerce, then we have to bring the whole thing under it, because there is no one of our industries which has not its regular connections with other industries and is affected by them, and therefore the department of commerce might be said to overlook and control and govern, and they all should be brought under its particular wing.

It seems to me there are certain things which are pertinent, some things immediately connected with it which it might be proper for it to have under its sole control as an advisory board; but if you take the Department of Labor, the Department of the Census, or any of these other subordinate bureaus and place them under the department of commerce you will simply have bureaus with only the remotest connection with commerce, and after all you have them under a secretary whose whole force can do nothing but give statistics, and he can get his statistics just as well from the Census Bureau, which furnishes four-fifths of all of the data, the raw material out of which these statistics are compiled, as to take a certain portion of the records and a certain proportion of the clerical force of that Department force and detach them from their original Department and place them in another one to which they do not belong.

The Census Department is continually getting the raw material out of which the greater portion of these statistics must come. This new department must get all its information from the several bureaus of the Government, and I am perfectly willing to erai bureaus of the Government, and I am perfectly willing to admit that I can not see, contrary to the idea of the Senator from Wisconsin, that any injury whatever would be done to the de-partment of commerce if every one of these bureaus were taken away from it and it got its data from them, as they are attached to the proper arms of the particular department to which they naturally belong.

I think I have said all I desire on this subject, and I confess I can not see why a department purely statistical in its character should necessarily take under its particular wing all the other bureaus which furnish the raw material, and if I agreed that it must do that, then I certainly would not know where to draw the line between what should be left out and what should be taken in.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Illinois withdraw his motion for a moment, not exceeding two?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Perkins in the chair). The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I am unwilling to be entirely silent and have it intimated that any member of the minority of the Commerce Committee desired in any way to antagonize the interests of the labor organizations of this country. I have been in public life a long while, and never in my life have I cast a vote or made a speech antagonistic to their interests, and I do not believe a single member of the Commerce Committee desired in any way to antagonize their interests in making a favorable report on In considering this bill before the Committee on Commerce there was never an intimation that a single labor organization in this country was against a favorable report, or against the very feature of the bill which we have been discussing.

the first time I ever heard at any time that the labor organiza-tions in any way opposed this change was from the President of the Senate no longer ago than yesterday. I desire to state that, on the contrary, the committee in considering this matter were informed and believed that the Labor Department and the labor organizations were really in favor of this change. It was not the purpose of that committee in any way to antagonize that interest. We simply thought that the Labor Department would be as efficiently administered under the new department as it had been administered in the past. We simply thought that by reason of the transfer the Labor Department would aid the commerce department in the discharge of its duties.

We thought likewise in regard to the Census Department. We did not desire to destroy or impair in any way the efficiency of those departments. We simply desired to take those departments and transfer them to the new department to aid the new department in carrying out its duties, without in any wise affecting the efficiency of the departments which were to be transferred. No one can say that I have at any time ever antagonized the interests of the labor organizations of our country.

Mr. CULLOM. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 27, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 23, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev.

Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOMESTEADS ON COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I now renew a r quest formerly made and ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 159) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers in the north one-half of the Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, and reserving the public lands for that purpose, be made a continuing order at the conclusion of the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, and continue so until disposed of, but not to interfere with appropriation bills, revenue bills, or business which under the rules is to be considered on Mondays and Fridays.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Sherman in the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill from the point which had been reached at the conclusion of the sitting on yesterday. The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Ordnance, ordnance stores, and supplies: For purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops, $250,000.

For reimbursement of contract or acting assistant surgeons, as provided in the paragraph appropriating $10,000 therefor in the general deficiency appropriation act approved March 3, 1901 (Stat. L., vol. 31, p. 1023), $10,000.

m the paragraph approved March 3, 1901 (Stat. L., vol. 31, p. 1925), 310, 400.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have some hesitancy as to the propriety of my addressing the House at this time in regard to the bill under consideration, but I desire to speak briefly with reference to the section which provides for the construction of barracks—a military post—for a soldiers in the Philippines at the city of Manila. I have listened to the section which provides for the construction of the city of Manila. tened for several days past to the eloquent advocates of the Filipino cause, and have been somewhat astonished at many of the statements and propositions submitted to the House by gentlemen on that question.

Now, sir, in the few minutes which I have at my disposal, I desire to state to the House that I am heartily in favor of that particular section of this bill, and for the reason that I do not at all agree with the gentlemen who have spoken as to the temporary character that should be given to an appropriation of this kind. I believe, for my part, that the United States will remain long in the Philippine Islands. I believe it will be absolutely necessary for the retention of a considerable military force in those islands to uphold the arm of the civil government for an those islands to uphold the arm of the civil government for an indefinite time, and that it would be the most absolute and cowardly mistake on the part of the American people and the Government of the United States to withdraw its forces from the Philippine Islands at any time within the range of human vision in the near future. I believe that we are to wait for developments—that we are to wait for the tutelage of these people, and somewhere in the future, perhaps, we shall be able to establish a permanent and satisfactory policy in regard to these islands.

But, sir, I shall not attempt to go over all of this debate, all that has been said, nor attempt to answer many of the things that have been said in this discussion. That would be absolutely impossible in the brief time at my disposal. I wish, however, to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the members of this House that I paid a visit to the Philippine Islands during the past summer, and gave such attention as I could to the condition of affairs existing in the islands. I learned as much of the people as I possibly could from personal observation and personal contact with all classes of them; and on the 6th day of October last, at the request of newspaper friends in Manila, I gave out an interview for publication in the Manila Times, which I now hold in my hand and will ask to have inserted in the substance of my remarks, in which interview I presented my views and judgment as to the capacity of these people for self-government. All I will state of this interview in connection with the pending bill is that it was my judgment then, deliberately formed, as to the people from Manila far up the Pasig River and down to the Sulu Islands, that as a people—as a mass—they were incapable of self-government, according ple-as a mass-they were incapable of self-government, according to our idea of republican government, just as much so as the

It is true that the Filipino race has produced a few men of remarkable intelligence. I might name Judge Arellano, of the supreme court; I might name also the three Filipino commissioners who are acting as a part of the government of the archipelago to-day; I might mention others, but will not do so at this time.

Now, the substance of that interview, as I say, was a statement that those people were not capable of self-government. For that judgment, which was cabled from Manila and published broadthat those people were not capable of self-government. For that judgment, which was cabled from Manila and published broadcast over the United States, I received much severe criticism. It was the first proposition of that kind evidently which had been sent home from those islands; at least, the papers would have it so. One newspaper in my own State went so far as to say that because of that judgment "Mr. Weeks never should have been permitted to go to the Philippine Islands." A daily journal in the city of Detroit said that. I shall ask to have that interview published as a part of my remarks on this occasion, so that gentlemen of the Honse may see what I did say. men of the House may see what I did say

CONGRESSMAN WEEKS'S VIEWS—CALLS FILIPINOS SAVAGES WITH THIN VENEERING OF CIVILIZATION.

CONGRESSMAN WEEKS'S VIEWS—CALLS FILIPINOS SAYAGES WITH THIN VENERIBE OF CIVILIZATION.

After the swing around the southern islands by the Congressional party, in which the members have had a limited time for investigation, a representative of the Times interviewed Congressman WEEKS. of Michigan, in regard to his opinions formed in reference to the people of the Philippines. To the question, "What is your opinion of the Philippine people," the Congressman said: "I have seen only the best of the natives and those who associate with the best. In the glimpses we have had in the interior, around the Laguna de Bay district and the Camarines, we have seen but little of the Filippine in his native haunts. With this in mind, relying upon information furnished by military officers and civil officials and others who have resided long in these islands, giving the Filippino full credit for his unfortunate misgovernment by the Spanish people and also considering the stultifying effects of the church in the Philippines, the net result leaves upon my mind this impression, that the Filippino people are little better than savages, with a very thin veneering of poor civilization. In expressing this opinion I take into consideration the skill of these people in certain lines, and I also consider the fact that they have produced quite a number of educated and clever men, men like Judge Arellano, of the supreme court, for instance.

"All that I have seen of architecture in these islands credited to the Filipino is the nipa shack. I have yet to learn of their having built a road in these islands, and jetes built of any other material than bamboo is the work of the Spaniards. I have yet to learn of a Filipino having built a road in these islands, and I believe had it not been for the Spaniards there would not exist in the Philippines a building more pretentious than a hut. The Filipinos never erected a school or built a ship, and everything of this kind of civilization is to be credited to the foreigner."

The next question asked was, create a unified and autonomous nation, which might take its place in the Far East as a republic based somewhat, but not wholly, on the ideas of the fathers of our Republic, I do not know. This might tend to regenerate the race, and perhaps serve as an example to other races who are two thousand years behind the age in which we live.

"When questioned Mr. Weeks declined to express an opinion as to future Congressional and Government policies likely to be adopted in the future."

I made the further statement in that interview that these people as a mass—excepting, of course, Judge Arellano and the Commissioners and others of that class—as a mass were "savages, covered with a very thin veneering of poor civilization." I think so now, and for this reason I think we should have permanent barracks, no matter at what expenditure or cost of money, to provide for the comfort of our soldiery, who, in my judgment, will remain long in the Philippine Islands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEEKS. It seems, Mr. Chairman, that the objection of the newspapers was founded largely upon my statement that the Filipino people as a mass, as a race, were savages covered with a thin veneer of civilization. I hold in my hand an extract from the same paper which condemned my judgment, giving an interview with Judge Johnson, one of the Federal judges in the Philippine Islands, who was formerly connected with the Michigan University, and who made the following statement, under date of December 24, in this newspaper:

After speaking of his going to Manila and taking up his duties as judge of the third judicial district at Manila, he said:

as judge of the third judicial district at Manila, he said:

I opened the first American court here July I and found & prisoners in jail when I arrived, many of whom had been awaiting trial for months and 44 of whom were charged with murder. Since that time I have tried in my different provinces I'3 defendants, have sentenced 3 men to death, and have 8 whom I shall sentence to death to-morrow. There are still I'3 men awaiting trial in this province alone, a majority of whom are charged with no less crimes than murder or attempt at murder. I tried one man who confessed that he had killed 13 persons, that the last one was a child, and that he held that in the fire until its feet were burned off. Just yesterday a woman was found cut almost to pieces within less than half a mile of my court room. This morning 7 men were brought in who confessed that they had assisted in beheading 3 of our little brown brothers. These facts make me feel that I am indeed living in a land of savages.

Mr. Chairment, the reversement which condended me analysished.

Mr. Chairman, the newspaper which condemned me published with approval this interview with Judge Johnson, of Manila, with a fine picture of the judge, without any criticism.

On this question of whether these people are a civilized people I ask to insert as a part of my remarks this extract from the Manila Times of November 1, 1901, giving a graphic account of the fight at the Gandara River just after the terrible massacre of Company A of the Ninth United States Infantry at Balgigan.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was on the island of Samar on the morning of that dreadful massacre. I was at the town of Catbalogan, some 25 or 30 miles, more or less, distant from the scene of that dreadful affair, and I saw people there exactly like those who performed that massacre.

Every gentleman here remembers well that horrible tragedy, how the insurrectos marched through the church, how within the church they picked up the arms that had been secreted there by the priest for their use; how the presidente of the town, the civil mayor, led the insurrectos to the attack of those defenseless men sitting at their breakfast table unarmed, and the horrible butchery that ensued. It was such a scene of savagery as no pic-ture can adequately portray. It was such savagery as the Navaho Indians were never guilty of. I have an account of that dread-ful affair which I sincerely wish might be included in my re-

The article which I have in my hand, published in the Manila Times of November 1, 1901, also justifies the judgment which I expressed time and time again, by speaking of the insurrectos as "savages" and their conduct on that occasion as "savagery," pure and simple; and the Manila Times, Mr. Chairman, is the best representative of American interests and American opinion published in the Philippine Islands.

CATBALOGAN, SAMAR, October 22, 1901.

Survivors of Lieutenant Wallace's detachment of Company E, Ninth Infantry, give accounts of the attack of the horde of bolomen on "Camp Denver," Gandara River, indicating the most heroic conduct by the veterans of the China campaign, who fought and died on a little camp ground no bigger than the back yard of a New York tenement house, up there between the swamps of Gandara River and the big hill in front of them, from which they were attacked by the Flipinos. It is difficult, nay, impossible, to imagine a more desperate and sanguinary hand-to-hand conflict than that which ensued when the wild yells of the attacking savages fell upon the camp. Some men were in the river bathing, and left their rifles on the bank with their clothing; others yet slumbered in their tents; still others were gathered about the five over which the morning coffee was sending out its aroms in the gray. The bolomen cut and thrust through the tent flags, wounding, in some cases killing, the slumbering soldiers so horribly aroused from their dreams and deep sleep that mark the last few moments before awakening. Two months after the publication of the interview which I gave out, and for which I was so bitterly condemned by the newspapers mentioned, the President of the United States addressed a ssage to this Congress, and in that message the President, on this very subject, said:

In the Philippines our problem is larger. They are very rich tropical islands, inhabited by many varying tribes, representing widely different stages of progress toward civilization. Our earnest effort is to help these people upward along the stony and difficult path that leads to self-government. We hope to make our administration of the islands honorable to our nation by making it of the highest benefit to the Filipinos themselves; and as an earnest of what we intend to do we point to what we have done. Already a greater measure of material prosperity and of governmental honesty and efficiency has been attained in the Philippines than ever before in their history. It is no light task for a nation to achieve the temperamental qualities without which the institutions of free government are but an empty mockery. Our people are now successfully governing themselves, because for more than a thousand years they have been slowly fitting themselves, sometimes consciously, sometimes unconsciously, toward this end. What has taken us thirty generations to achieve we can not expect to see another race accomplish out of hand, especially when large portions of that race start very far behind the point which our ancestors had reached even thirty generations ago. In dealing with the Philippine people we must show both patience and strength, forbearance and steadfast resolution. Our aim is high. We do not desire to do for the islanders merely what has elsewhere been done for tropic peoples by even the best foreign governments. We hope to do for them what has never before been done for any people of the tropics—to make them fit for self-government after the fashion of the really free nations.

History may safely be challenged to show a single instance in which a masterful race such as ours, having been forced by the exigencies of war to take possession of an alien land, has behaved to its inhabitants with the disinterested zeal for their progress that our people have shown in the Philippines. To leave the islanders a constantly increasing measure of self-government exactly as fast as they show themselves fit to exercise it. Since the civil government was established not an appointment has been made in the islands with any reference to consideration show a sufficiently humanitarian spirit. The danger comes in the opposite direction.

There are still troubles ahead in the islands. The insurrection has become an affair of local banditti and marauders, who deserve no higher regard than the brigands of portions of the Old World. Encouragement, direct or indirect, to these insurrectos stands on the same footing as encouragement to hostile Indians in the days when we still had Indian wars. Exactly as our aim is to give to the Indian who remains peaceful the fullest and ampliest consideration, but to have it understoed that we will show no weakness if he goes on the warpath, so we must make it evident, unless we are false to our own traditions and to the demands of civilization and humanity, that while we will do everything in our power for the Filipino who is peaceful, we will take the sternest measures with the Filipino who follows the path of the insurrecto and the ladrone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have ten minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. WEEKS. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will go hurriedly over that part of my remarks. I come to the proposition again "that this race of people are capable of self-government" according to our conception of a republican form of government. "No," say some gentlemen on the other side, "we can not expect them to govern themselves according to our ideas; we expect them to govern themselves according to their own ideas."

our ideas; we expect them to govern themselves according to their own ideas."

Well, Mr. Chairman, they never had any ideas of self-government. For four hundred years they have submitted to a government which took away from them every particle of self-respect and self-action. They have never been given an opportunity; and rather than give it to these people, from my observation of them, I would go to New Mexico and clothe the Navajo Indians with all the rights and privileges of self-government which gentlemen of this House enjoy in their respective communities.

Not only this, Mr. Chairman, but very soon after this Congress convened General Chaffee sent a report to the President regarding crimes which had been committed in the Philippine Islands, based upon the testimony in trials in the military courts, in which comes from the members of this House. The poor Filipinos are made to believe by the speeches made here that the American Government is going to establish a tyrannical government over them, and they are to be oppressed, their property is to be destroyed, their churches despoiled, and all that.

Now I wish to call the attention of the House to a symposium of opinion on this subject published in the January number of the North American Review. The three native members of the Civil Commission at Manila were asked, among other things, to answer this question, their answers to be published in this great answer this question, their answers to be published in this great magazine:

What form of government ought to be established in the islands by the Congress of the United States?

The first answer which I quote from is that of T. H. Pardo de Tavera. If there is an honest civil commissioner, a learned Filipino, a man who understands the thoughts and feelings of his race—if they have any—it is T. H. Pardo de Tavera. On this subject he says:

subject he says:

We supporters of the Federal party aspire to see the Filipinos constitute themselves some day into a State like those which form the Union. Until we are in a condition to obtain this final desire we hope that, gradually and in accordance with the capacity and situation of our people, the government of the Philippines may go on acquiring a state of autonomy more and more complete, approaching the definite form of its final development. If we had not had so prolonged a war there is no doubt that it would have been necessary to organize a government like that which has been given to Porto Rico and to Hawaii. We understand that the war has created for us a different situation, and although we desire to day to have the benefits of self-government established in these islands, I believe that the condition in which we find ourselves placed would not justify it.

established in these islands, I believe that the condition in which we find ourselves placed would not justify it.

I commend that to those gentlemen who are so lugubrious about our refusal to give absolute self-government to the Filipinos.

For the present it seems to me that Congress should approve the provisional form of government established here, maintaining it during one, two, or perhaps three years in such a way that when partisan feelings have been calmed, when a certain lack of confidence between Americans and Filipinos has disappeared, the time will have arrived for giving us a territorial government.

To-day the Filipinos desire, as the most important measure of the American Government, that there be conceded to us a chamber of representatives of the people, chosen by election. Nothing could be more just; but is it, indeed, opportune? We can not and do not forget that the isle of Samar, that of Cebu, that of Bohol, Batangas, and other provinces, although they do not constitute, to be sure, a great part of our territory, are to-day in open rebellion against the United States.

Those provinces would not be able to send representatives, if it were attempted now to establish a congress by popular vote. Furthermore, in those places which are pacified I do not know to what extent it would be practicable to hold an election, in view of the circumstances in regard to political and partisan education which exist to-day. It would be sad, indeed, if a chamber formulated at this time by popular election should prove unavailing at this time, and that the Government would find itself compelled to suppress it, an act which would not only wound the amour propre of the Filipinos, but might retard the time for establishing a real Territorial government without the restrictions which present conditions would impose.

The next Filipino witness that I will call to the stand is Benito

The next Filipino witness that I will call to the stand is Benito Legarda, civil commissioner. He says, among other things:

The next Filipino witness that I will call to the stand is Benito Legarda, civil commissioner. He says, among other things:

Although there are powerful reasons for believing that a more autonomous government would be very beneficial to the moral and material reconstruction of this archipelago, they are no less weighty than those held by people who are of the opinion that the status quo of the existing provisional government ought to prevail for the period of two years. This time is considered indispensable to allow the Filipinos to become conversant with their individual rights and their use, and to become familiar with the right of suffrage, which, as has been said before, is an entirely new thing to them. The most powerful argument to be found in favor of the latter view is based on the results of the municipal elections in some provinces, where the voters, instead of considering the common good, have allowed themselves to be influenced by the dominant casiquism or by the party passions and puerile reactionism which not long ago incited the war. There is no doubt that the Filipino people must purge themselves of these vices inherited from their former rulers, and which are to day deeply rooted in them, before they can fully enter upon the exercise of their rights. When this has been brought about it will be well to remember that sudden changes are seldom beneficial and that a gradual development is always more advantageous.

The hope of the Filipino people would be to have a legislative chamber of representatives who were elected from each province, though such elections should be limited and restricted, in that the electors would have to combine the qualifications of fitness and capability as well as the elected; and these conditions should be made also to apply to the powers of the chamber to the extent that its acts might be set aside whenever the executive government though that measure necessary for the common good.

It would also be well to allow a delegation, composed of several persons elected from w ing crimes which had been committed in the Philippine Islands, based upon the testimony in trials in the military courts, in which he said:

Now I read a few lines from José Ruiz de Luzuriaga, civil commissioner:

No great state was ever founded or ever will be founded upon such treach ery and ignorance as characterize the Filipino people.

So you have the President, Judge Johnson, and General Chaffee; but some of our friends on the other side who are espousing the Philippine cause are heard to complain. The suggestion that the Philippine race have been oppressed comes largely from this House. You do not hear it from the intelligent Filipinos. It

So long as this abnormal condition exists it does not appear to me that it would be prudent and politic to introduce any change in the established government of these islands. Only when hostilities shall have completely ceased, when the popular mind is less perturbed, ought there to be thought of forming a popular chamber of representatives, elected by suffrage under an election law which, by its wise restrictions, shall offer a safe guaranty that such representatives shall be wisely chosen. With this chamber of representatives the civil commission as at present organized would cooperate, constituting a council of government to the executive power of the governor and the secretaries of the departments, the latter having the powers of a senate. Such a form of government, I believe, would satisfy the Filipino people until such time as they were capable of forming, as a Territory, a part of the great Republic of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, these are the conjuience of the best Filipin and the secretaries.

Mr. Chairman, these are the opinions of the best Filipinos living to-day in the Philippine Islands, and I heartily concur from my own personal observation with the wisdom contained in these opinions. These gentlemen know what they are talking about and evidently some who talk on the other side of this question do

Dr. José Rizal, whose fame and reputation are well known to most Americans who have been interested in Philippine affairs, was the best representative of the Filipino race in many respects whom I can at this time recall. He was educated abroad, spent most of his life in the pursuit of his education in Spain and other European countries, and returned in his young manhood to his native land with a patriotic desire to lift his country out of its terrible social, political, and religious condition.

Dr. Rizal, among other things, wrote a novel called "An Eagle Flight," in which he gave an absolutely correct picture of the religious, social, and political conditions among the Filipino people. Nothing contained in that book does an injustice, while the faults of the people are faithfully exposed. In dedicating his book Rizal wrote this:

TO MY COUNTRY:

To My Country:

The records of human suffering make known to us the existence of ailments of such nature that the slightest touch irritates and causes tormenting pains. Whenever, in the midst of modern civilization, I have tried to call up thy dear image, O my country! either for the comradeship of remembrance or to compare thy life with that about me, I have seen thy fair face disfigured and distorted by a hideous social cancer.

Eager for thy health, which is our happiness, and seeking the best remedy for thy pain, I am about to do with thee what the ancients did with their sick. They exposed them on the steps of their temples, that everyone who came to adore the divinity within might offer a remedy.

So I shall strive to describe faithfully thy state without extenuation; to lift a corner of the covering that hides thy sore; sacrificing everything to truth, even the love of thy glory, while loving, as thy son, even thy frailties and sins.

And that, Mr. Chairman, is what ought to be done by every honest man who addresses this House. He should leave behind his partisanship, his eagerness to attack the Administration, and tell the truth to this House without coloring and without flattery. This would give the American people a better idea of the tremendous task which has been imposed upon them by the unlooked-for events of the war with Spain.

The result of that war placed under our care and in our possession the islands of the Philippines, with all the different races—
Moro and Filipino, Mohammedan and Catholic, Tagal and Macabebe—with all the bigotry, ignorance, and treachery inherited from their own Malay race, and all the vices they acquired through contact with the Spaniard; and when the Spanish sovereignty was destroyed, before heaven, and before the nations of the earth, the American people became responsible for peace and good order, for the protection of life and property, in all that archipelago.

We were confronted by a great proposition—500,000 Mohammedans, with all their fierce bigotry, whom to step upon or interfere with in regard to established religious customs or traditions would precipitate a bloody religious conflict with a warlike race, not one of whom fears death.

Some gentlemen seem to think we ought to have turned away and left the Filipino people to settle these great racial and religious problems. We would by such course have been responsible for the welter of blood that would have ensued, as the President himself has put it.

When these islands were acquired by conquest, by treaty, and by cession they became our "property," and it was the duty of Congress, under the Constitution authorizing it, to make all needful rules and regulations for the government of the property and territory of the United States, anticipating the inevitable situation, to go on and create some form of government suitable to the capacity of the race which had fallen under our control and to administer that government as wisely as possible.

A distinguished Senator, a day or two ago, at the other end of the Capitol, in a very able speech, said on this subject:

We can not set up any system of temporary government in the nature of a tutelage to those people with the ultimate end of admitting them into a participation in the affairs of this nation.

I agree with the Senator in this statement. I also agree with the Senator in his remark that

If a republic is to survive it must be a homogeneous, united nation, with all its people standing upon an equal footing, with equal privileges under the safeguards of a constitution and the operation of equal and just laws. The Philippines can never be admitted into the select and sacred circle constituting the sisterhood of the Republic.

Applying these remarks to the present situation as he saw them and as I saw them, I am wholly in accord with this proposition. I look into the far future before any American statesman should advocate the erection of a State out of the Philippine Islands or any portion of them.

I regret the brevity which I was compelled to adopt in giving my views upon the Filipino people.

The war policy of the Government in the Philippines has been bitterly assailed on this floor by most of the gentlemen who excuse the Filipino and condemn our effort to put down the in-surrection in the islands. To show what public opinion on this subject is supposed to be in the Philippines, I quote at length an editorial in one of the leading American newspapers of Manila:

[The Manila American, Saturday, November 2, 1901.]

editorial in one of the leading American newspapers of Manila:

[The Manila American, Saturday, November 2, 1901.]

PLENTY OF AMERICAN PRECIDENTS.

General Smith's "fire and sword" policy in Samar is unprecedented in the annals of the American Army, and although it is the remedy approved of by every experienced Philippine campasigner for recalcitrant natives, considerable doubt exists in military circles here concerning the attitude which the state of the state of the concerning the attitude which the state of the state of

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] on yesterday, in discussing the establishment of this military post, rang the changes on the importance of sheltering and protecting our troops during the wet season, and so eloquent was he upon this theme that he not only received the solid support of his side of the House, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cummings] said that he would not be found voting against the protection at shelter of the American soldies. the protection or shelter of the American soldier.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a copy of the hearings had before the Committee on Appropriations in regard to this military post, and those hearings show that it is impossible to build this post for which the gentleman contended at any time before the 1st of next November, when the rainy season will be over. By questions which he himself asked he brought out this fact, using his own language:

If you put it through under whip and spur, and your appropriation was nade available by the 1st of February, it would be the middle of February sefore you could advertise, and it would be the 1st of March before you rould get bids, would it not?

General Ludington, Quartermaster-General, assented to that, and then the chairman of the committee went on and said that it and then the chairman of the committee went on and said that it would be the 1st of May before this lumber could be shipped to the Philippine Islands, and the Quartermaster-General stated in those hearings that it would take nine months to build this post.

As a matter of fact, this appropriation was not recommended for the sheltering of our troops in the Philippine Islands. In House Document No. 94, which contains a letter from General Chaffee, he asks that $200,000 be made available on the 1st day of December and that $300,000 more be added thereafter. And this contlaves who has so much record for the sheltering of our troops gentleman who has so much regard for the sheltering of our troops did not bring this matter before Congress until the 15th day of

So that instead of any man's judgment in this House being diverted from the question at issue by a demagogical appeal to members in favor of the soldiers of the country, we were led into a mistake, because the gentleman was not candid enough to give us the facts which he had in his possession as to the building of us the facts which he had in his possession as to the building of this post. In the parliamentary language of the gentleman from Illinois, it was "idiotic" in him to undertake to mislead the House upon this question. Everybody knows that this is but one of the policies of this Administration to build Army posts in the Philippines, to expend large sums of money there, so that when the question shall finally arise whether we shall retain those islands or not, we shall be answered by saying, "We have spent millions of dollars in those islands, and we can not get rid of them; we must hold them."

Mr. Chairman, there was no instification for the remarks of the

Mr. Chairman, there was no justification for the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois in which he undertook to make it appear to the public that those who were opposing this measure—which should have been sent to the Committee on Military Affairs and, if it had been necessary, could have been reported by them long before this bill came to this House—were withholding proper protection from our troops in Manila. And when you consider the fact that this bill has to go to the Sanata way may be contain that fact that this bill has to go to the Senate, you may be certain that the timber for the building of this post will not reach Manila until the rainy season has begun and until no work whatever can be done upon it

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay] has seen fit to allude to a remark which I made on the floor of this House yesterday while a vote was being taken on an amendment to this bill providing for the shelter and protection of our troops in the Philippines. The RECORD quotes me

When I fail to vote to protect the lives of American soldiers in the service of the American Republic I hope I shall be paralyzed.

It did not print the remark which induced me to make this decla ration. When I arose to vote for the amendment a member of the House near me said: "What are you doing? Why don't you sit down? Sit down!" I made the reply on the spur of the moment, and when I reflect on it I glory in it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I mean every word of it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] having charge of this urgent deficiency bill—this emergency bill—was appealed to by the Secretary of War to insert in it a provision to protect the American soldiers in the Philippines from the ravages of disease-deadly fevers and the Philippines from the ravages of disease—deadly levers and pestilence. Why? Because the rainy season was coming on, and they had no adequate shelter. It was the truth. Ah, Mr. Chairman, I have not forgotten the rainy season of last year, when the columns of our American newspapers were filled with long lists of the soldiers who had died in these islands from loathsome fevers for lack of proper shelter.

I have seen the sad faces of the American mothers whose sons were the righting of these miasmatic favers. I have seen their

I have seen the sad faces of the American mothers whose sons were the victims of these miasmatic fevers. I have seen their tears and heard their moans. I would be untrue to every drop of blood in my body if I refused to respond to such an appeal for the protection of soldiers in the service of the Republic. It was an appeal on behalf of American women, whose sons are still fighting the battles of the Republic in these islands. I would blacken the Revolutionary blood coursing in my veins if I stabbed these American mothers to the heart by refusing to vote for this appropriation for the shelter and protection of their sons. [Applause on the Republican side]

on the Republican side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I have not forgotten that the point of order against this appropriation came first from the other side of the House, and, thank God, not from this side [turning to the Democratic side]. How fatally you jumped the track before you got through. [Laughter.] You started right, but you came out wrong. [Laughter and applause.] I simply jumped from the train when I saw it going to destruction.

I did believe that the original proposition was subject to a point of order, but I am the last man to make such a point of order at such a time. When the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was offered, and this House officially declared that it was in order, I felt it my duty as a Democrat, as a Tammany Hall Democrat, if you please—as a Democrat who drew his inspiration from that immortal and patriotic statesman, Stephen A. Douglas, and not from John C. Breckinridge—to vote for the appropriation. I am proud of that vote. [Applause.]

Rather than change it, I would have it inscribed in letters of gold where it could be seen by every man in the country. There can be no politics in questions where the lives of American soldiers are at stake. I always have and always shall vote to protect the lives of the men who are fighting the battles of this Republic, whether they are baring their breasts to the bullets of the enemy or whether they are encamped in swamps, exposed to the more insidious and more deadly danger of fever and pesti-

nce. [Applause].
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, the wording of the amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee induces me to submit a few remarks before debate shall conclude.

If I believed that the appropriation of $500,000, provided for by If I believed that the appropriation of $500,000, provided for by that amendment, was necessary for the shelter and protection of the officers and enlisted men in our army in the Philippines, I would support it if every other man in this Chamber voted against it, but I do not believe the appropriation is necessary for that purpose. It appears to me to be a mere subterfuge, an effort to accomplish something by indirection which gentlemen fear to attempt in the direct and usual way. How utterly perverted are all the purposes of the war, anyway. In what strange seas are we drifting. How unnatural everything appears.

When war was declared, for one I was for it. Under the same

When war was declared, for one I was for it. Under the same circumstances I would be for it again. Spain was murdering a people struggling for liberty just a few miles from our shores. Our great Republic had witnessed this until forbearance made us almost guilty, and when our battle ship was blown up in Habana harbor, as I believe by Spanish agencies, the people of my State felt it was our duty to avenge the outrage, and my district offered up the first young life as a sacrifice upon his country's altar. We fought in the righteous cause of liberty, and God gave us the victory. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Did anyone then believe that when Cuba was freed we would use our soldiers and our ships to subjugate a people struggling for liberty? The best shelter, the best protection, we can give to our officers and enlisted men is to bring them away from scenes of disease and crime and death back to their own American homes. [Applause on the Democratic When war was declared, for one I was for it. Under the same to their own American homes. [Applause on the Democratic

During the year 1900, Mr. Chairman, there were 66,882 men in our army in the Pacific islands. There were more cases of sickness in our hospitals than there were men; that is to say, that upon an average every soldier in the service was sick once, and 10,547 were sick twice. Of course many were not sick at all while others were admitted to the hospitals several times. The report of the Surgeon-General of the Army shows that during the year 1900 the number of admissions to sick report in our army of 66,882 soldiers in the Pacific islands reached the enormous total of 77,429. How many of these died I do not know, but this we do know that 397 American lives were sacrificed during that year upon the field of battle in the Philippine Islands. And in what cause?

I will give you the answer out of the mouth of the greatest statesman of the Republican party, who but recently has declared that we are engaged in the "unholy work of crushing a republic." Statistics for the year 1901 have not been given us, but when they are they will furnish additional evidence of the stupid blunder we have made in attempting to take over the Philippines. blunder we have made in attempting to take over the Philippines as a part of our Republic. Accurate figures are not given us showing the number of lives taken by our soldiers. If they were the conscience of the Republic would revolt and demand that the war be ended. Gentlemen seem to forget the principle that a nation can do wrong as well as an individual, that a nation can commit crime even as an individual can commit crime. The responsibility of a continuance of this wretched state of affairs rests upon each gentleman in this Chamber, and he can not escape it if [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And what an anomaly in government we have, Mr. Chairman! Republican, colonial, and monarchical governments all under the Constitution of the United States. The President is as absolute over the Philippines as the Czar is over Russia. We were told that we needed these islands in the interest of trade, and yet the other day we saw the majority in this Chamber pass a bill protecting our infant American industries against competition in the Philippines. How long shall the war last? Soon four years will have passed. How long will it take 66,000 men to completely subdue 8,000,000?

Again, I say, how utterly have the high purposes of the war been perverted! We are simply continuing what Spain was too weak to accomplish in the Philippines, while at home we see slandered, persecuted, and humiliated the great admiral who gave the stroke which destroyed the Spanish fleet and which ought to have ended the war. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute or two minutes longer to conclude my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU then resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I venture the assertion that if gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber had been able to see the camps in the city of Manila during the time that I was there there would not have been a single vote on either side of the House against the proposition which was submitted on yesterday by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

There are three camps in the city of Manila, one, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, near the Lunetta. This camp lies on a low tract of land, within about 200 yards of the Bay of Manila. In the rainy season, within ten minutes after one of these tropical rainstorms has started, the entire camp is one sheet of water. The floors of the tents are flooded. It is a crime to ask soldiers wearing the blue to remain in quarters such as those, There is another camp in a nipa hut, or rather in a nipa cockpit, a building that was formerly used by the Filipinos for the favorite national game. It is entirely inadequate to the purposes for which it is used. It is an outrage to shelter soldiers there. There are gentlemen on that side of the House who would not put a pet dog which they loved in such quarters.

There is enother howevery in the substrates.

There is another barracks in the suburb of Malate, which is probably the best of the three. It is an old Spanish barracks. It is antiquated. It is probably capable of housing one battalion of our troops. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this money is absolutely necessary at this time in order that the work of properly housing and sheltering the soldiers who are in the islands may be begun

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou] has just stated that the soldiers should be brought home at once. I commend to him and to the gentlemen of that side of the House the conduct of the regiment from Tennessee which had already been placed on board the transport to come home, and when the news was brought to them that the Filipino insurrectos were firing upon their country's flag they begged to be allowed to go back on shore and defeat the enemies of their country, which they did in a magnificent manner. [Applause.]

I desire also to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that I desire also to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that statements such as these are working an injury to the soldiers who are fighting for the American flag. General Smith, who went there as colonel of the First California Regiment, who subsequently was made governor of the island of Negros, and who is now a justice of the supreme court of the Philippines, a Democrat, if you please; Col. Robert Lee Bullard, of Alabama, a Democrat, if you please, both told me that in the regions which were held by their commands the greatest injury to their soldiers had been inflicted by reason of the fact that speeches made upon the floor of the House of Representatives and in the Senate of the United States had been translated into the Spanish language and United States had been translated into the Spanish language and had been there circulated among the natives, and I hold in my hand now a speech of Mr. Lentz, of Ohio, translated into the Spanish language and circulated among the ignorant natives there, who are only too ready to believe any of the statements that are made against the Americans.

Mr. SHATTUC. They are the only ones who would believe

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman from California permit a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. I should like to ask, in the opinion of the gentleman from California, have the speeches made by Democrats or the speeches made by Republicans along the lines he has mentioned done the greatest harm in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I will say to the gentleman that as there were more Democratic speeches made along that line, probably more of them were circulated; but I do not care who made the speeches, the speeches worked the injury. speeches, the speeches worked the injury.

[Here the hammer fell.]

which our soldiers have been treated there for the last two or three years. Now, I want to ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. Kahn] and one or two others, whose fault is it? It is not the fault of this side of the House.

Under the Spooner amendment, which the gentleman from Illi-Cheer the Spooner amendment, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] read yesterday, which confers imperial powers upon the President of the United States, he is absolute in the Philippine Islands, and whatever his orders and commands are they have to be obeyed by the authorities there, both civil and military. Now, up to last April all the expenses of the renting of quarters and the housing of soldiers in the Philippine Islands were paid out of the revenues that were collected there.
With the absolute revenues that were collected there.

With the absolute power and control in the hands of the Presiwith the absolute power and control in the hands of the Frest-dent, I ask the gentleman from California who is to blame if our soldiers were housed in hovels that a dog ought not to be put into? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Who put our soldiers there, except those who are directing and controlling not only that side of the House, but who are controlling everything in the Philip-pine Islands? You had the money; you had absolute control and absolute command. Why, in all these years, have you not pro-vided proper quarters for the soldiers out there? Who is respon-sible except you and the men who help to keep you here? sible except you and the men who help to keep you here? Mr. KAHN rose.

Mr. KAHN rose.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from California?
Mr. PIERCE. Yes.
Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman allow me to reply?
Mr. PIERCE. Ask your question. If you have a reply to make, you can reply in your own time.
Mr. KAHN. You asked me a question, and I simply say that the officers in command of these men are doing the best they can, but they are being hampered by the acts of Congress and certain Congressmen. Congressmen

Mr. PIERCE. The law makes the President of the United States absolute master in the Philippines. He controls every dollar of the revenues collected, and you know it. and you needed no authority from Congress to provide shelter. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Furthermore, the representatives of our authorities in the Philippine Islands have now and have had all the time the revenues to do this work.

Mr. PIERCE. That is what I have been saying all the time.

The authority given the President by the Spooner amendment, under which the Republican majority sustained the Chairman in putting the amendment upon this bill, is unlimited, both civil and military. Now, they knew the conditions of the soldiers there. Who is to blame that they were living in that condition, illy provided for, but the President and those under him? He was absolute master, and had the right to appropriate the money. Are we to blame? No; we have nothing whatever to do with the management of this matter in the Philippine Islands.

agement of this matter in the Philippine Islands.

You have the money to pay commissioners out there $20,000 a year, but you have not the money to properly care for the soldiers of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You have not that, but you can run up a salaried list of $70,000 or $100,000 a year, and money enough can not be found to put a little shelter over our soldiers that a dog could live in. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] That is the Republican care and love for the soldier. That is an instance of it that the gentleman from California has just brought into this House and yet you love for the soldier. That is an instance of it that the gentleman from California has just brought into this House, and yet you blame us and criticise this side of the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PIERCE. The Philippine Commission, as shown in their report, assumed legislative control and began making appropria-

Mr. Plekce. The Philippine Commission, as shown in their report, assumed legislative control and began making appropriations September, 1900, and to June 30, 1901, had appropriated over $8,000,000. Then you come and blame us because our soldiers are illy cared for. I am sorry to say that gentlemen even upon this side have had the temerity to get up and blame us for standing by what we conceive to be the rules of the House.

There is no man upon this side but what wants to see our soldiers in the Philippines properly cared for. We desire to see all that money and the law can do to protect them. We believe as

Mr. Pierce rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The proforma amendments are withdrawn and the gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Pierce. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this question and the criticism of this side, for the vote that it gave on yesterday in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, have been beneficial in this: They have shown the conditions existing in the Philippine Islands and the manner in the Constitution and the law, for which we think gentlemen on that side have little respect. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, let us see. We find the conditions as existing in the Phil-

Now, let us see. We find the conditions as existing in the Philippine Islands. I do not propose to go into the discussion of this question as to the right or wrong of our soldiers being there. In the few minutes I have no one can do justice to that question, and I shall not be led off into a discussion from that standpoint. But when the distinguished gentleman from Illinois on yesterday alluded to the three or four million slaves that had been freed in our own land, it flashed over me just what is being done out in the Philippine Islands.

the Philippine Islands.

The Philippine Commission tell us, and I have it here, that slavery existed in all the Moro country, and also that polygamy is universally practiced. The present Philippine Commission unanimously recommend that the slaves be let alone, for the reason that the people of that country are a lot of war-like fellows, and we should let them alone and let it work out. Does the Constitution of the United States go out there? If it does, it would not allow the slaves of the Sultan to be kept, or the plural wives of the Sultan that we know he has.

I agree with the gentleman that under the construction of the Republican party the Constitution does not go to the Philippine Republican party the Constitution does not go to the Philippine Islands, as they construe it, because the Constitution says that wherever the flag of the Union floats it shall float over free men and women and not over slaves. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the flag in the Philippine Islands to-day is floating over slaves, held as such by the power and authority of the Republican party, through its President and the Army and Navy of the United States.

Why do you not say something about this on that side? Why do you not inquire what slaves are held in Mindanao or Jolo, or

Why do you not say something about this on that side? Why do you not inquire what slaves are held in Mindanao or Jolo, or whatever you may call it, and say that we will wipe out this blot on American territory, as they say it is now for certain purposes, but not for the purpose of the Constitution? Gentlemen, clean your own stables before you propose to tackle somebody else's. We condemn the Republican party, which for three long years has permitted and upheld slavery and polygamy in the Philippines, for not wiping out these foul blots upon the escutcheon of our country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, upon yesterday points of order were made, an amendment offered, and a point of order made on it, discussion upon the merits, and the committee adopted it, and it will be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, namely, that it do pass.

Gentlemen, as they have a right to do, in the absence of a point of order made, proceed after the fact to indulge in discussion. I have not made a point of order, and as long as it is confined without too great loss of time probably will not. I do not much like to talk about a matter that is passed, and shall not to any considerable extent. But in view of the remarks of my colleague on the subcommittee that prepared the bill, and upon the committee that reported it, all unanimous, I feel called upon just to make a statement. One gentleman on the other side read a part of an extract without reading all of the hearing before the committee in the preparation of this bill. We did have hearings, we printed them, and, as is usual in our subcommittees, we exhausted the subject so far as we could. We are in the habit of taking the other side, sifting it to the bottom, and then, when we are through, make and, as is usual in our subcommittees, we exhausted the subject so far as we could. We are in the habit of taking the other side, sifting it to the bottom, and then, when we are through, make such recommendations as seem to us to be required for the public good. That was what was done in this case. And after a full hearing, by the unanimous action of that committee, we reported this bill without any minority report or recommendation.

So far as I am concerned, and I believe so far as the members of our committee on that side of the Heyes are generated, we did of our committee on that side of the House are concerned, we did or our committee on that side of the House are concerned, we did not have a thought that a partisan tinge was to be given to this recommendation. I am sure my good friend from Tennessee [Mr. Pierce], who has just addressed the House, if it did not meet his approval, and he supposed it was to be used for partisan pur-poses, would have registered his dissent. Why has it taken a partisan tinge? Because it suited the purpose of some gentlemen partisan tinge? Because it suited the purpose of some gentlemen on that side, not members of the committee, to give it a partisan tinge, thick and fast with points of order, and then discussion of the whole question. That is where it comes.

So that as this measure passed this side of the House, with some help from that side, and not a great deal in numbers, had to pass it. Now, that is all there is of it—the whole story.

Now, my friend who last addressed the committee said that for years the Perublicane have had accurate the Philippings and these years the Republicans have had power in the Philippines, yet they hold slaves down there under the Sultan of Jolo; yes, and polygamy, and all that kind of a thing. Well, the law prohibits it, and the law is being enforced as rapidly as possible. The law prohibits polygamy in this country, and yet you have it in Utah. The law prohibits it in this country, and yet you have it among the Indian tribes. The law prohibits bigamy, and yet you have it in all the States. The law prohibits murder, larceny, and all kinds of crime, and yet you have them throughout the country.

It is a part of the progress of civilization that law and order canonly be had as the great majority of the people compels, in the fullness of time, the individual who violates the law to suffer the

Mr. SHATTUC. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if the contract known as the Bates treaty, ratified by the Senate, does not protect the Sultan of Jolo both in slavery and in polygamy, and pledges the Army and Navy to protect him in his religious and civil rights?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, that is not worthy of my good friend from Tennessee, who, unless by party stress, usually rises to the point of statesmanship.

Mr. PIERCE. Well, isn't it true?
Mr. CANNON. No; it is not true.
Mr. PIERCE. Does the gentleman deny that that is in the contract or treaty?

Mr. CANNON. Now, my friend from Tennessee wants to switch me off upon another matter not involved in this discussion.

Mr. PIERCE. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois is doing the switching himself; I am trying to hold him to the ques-

Mr. CANNON. I have the gentleman's question, and I will try and answer it. With 10,000,000 people, with an insurrection, with all the different languages and all the different races, because law and order could not effect a millennium there in a day, the gentleman champs his teeth. Let me tell you: Three hundred years ago almost one hundred people upon the Mayflower landed at Plymouth Rock. Inside of six months 50 of them were buried; but still they came on and on. Then came the settlement, and then came the Indian wars; then came the treaties; and through the three centuries of colonies and as United States we have been extending our borders and our boundaries from genwe have been extending our borders and our boundaries from generation to generation; and there is just as much sense, or would have been as much sense, if my friend had been a member of the British Parliament when the people died by the wholesale as they moved on to this continent of criticising with their jeremiads as there is now in my friend giving out his jeremiads here.

I will state in conclusion, and then I will ask the Clerk to read, that this metter has already hear dispessed of in committee.

I will state in conclusion, and then I will ask the Clerk to read, that this matter has already been disposed of in committee. Right or wrong, the United States owns the Philippine Islands, and the Anglo-Saxon people, abroad or here, never have parted with an acre of soil when they have once owned it. We have got to deal with it, and will deal with it, and now, respectfully, let me say, that we will march on and you will be criticising and making mouths while we march. URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy the attention of the committee for only a moment for the purpose of correcting a statement which was made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Pierce] with regard to the so-called Bates treaty. It is true that General Bates, then in command of some of our forces in the Philippines, negotiated a treaty with the Sultan of Sulu which recognized the institution of slavery in the Sunin of that potentate. It is also true that that agreement was forwarded to the President of the United States for the purpose of obtaining his approval. It is further true that the President of the United States expressly repudiated that part of the agreement with the Sultan, and directed General Bates to communicate to him that the Government of the United States could recognize slavery nowhere under the American flag.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, while I would not lightly invoke the wrath of God and do not wish to invite physical disability, I will agree to share, upon a percentage basis, with my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. Cummings] his paralysis when I fail to do my duty by voting all necessary money for the purpose of protecting the soldiers and sailors of this Government when doing their duty under the flag. But, Mr. Chairman, I will not relinquish my right to exercise my judgment, nor will I willingly consent that the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee shall confiscate all the privileges of the committee, of which I am an humble member, without entering a protest.

I believe now, as I believed yesterday when this debate was on, that had there been sent to the Committee on Military Affairs that had there been sent to the Committee on Military Affairs the recommendations for quarters, temporary or permanent, for the protection of troops in the island of Manila or elsewhere, an appropriation could have come out of that committee within forty-eight hours after the bill had been sent there. At no time since I have been a member of that committee have I seen partisanship control in its deliberations. At no time—and I believe the chairman of the committee, the distinguished member from Layre [Mr. Hull] will been me out in this statement, has there Iowa [Mr. Hull], will bear me out in this statement—has there been an effort on the part of any Democrat to impede any proper or necessary appropriations for the defense of the country or the or necessary appropriations for the defense of the country or the prosecution of all its just enterprises.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hearings had by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in the investigation of this question, which investigation was conducted by the chairman of that great committee, establish clearly the fact, out of the mouth of the Quartermaster-General having these improvements in charge, that it would be utterly impossible to undertake the improvements with any hope of completing them or putting them in an advanced stage of construction before the rainy season shall have come on; that rainy season from which it is contended this appropriation is necessary to protect our troops.

Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Clerk to read from the report of the hearings, to which I have just referred (beginning on page 61)

the hearings, to which I have just referred (beginning on page 61 and including the paragraph marked on page 62), the statement of General Ludington, made in the course of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. This is an estimate for the post at Manila, and your note is there at the bottom of the page. How long would it take to construct this post?

General Ludington. I should say it would take nine months at least; say six to nine months.

The CHAIRMAN. That means barracks, officers' quarters, sewerage, and everything?

General Ludington. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. And it is permanent in its nature?
General Ludington. It is to be built of lumber.
The Chairman. And it is to be a permanent post. You can not do that in nine months.
General Ludington. I said nine months. Probably it will take a year.
There is only one season of the year that you can work to much advantage there.

Mr. SLAYDEN (interrupting the reading). I will not ask the Clerk to continue the reading. He has read far enough to establish, out of the mouth of the Quartermaster-General, that it would be impossible, in less than nine to twelve months, to complete these barracks which it was contended were necessary for plete these barracks which it was contended were necessary for the protection of our troops during the coming rainy season. Mr. CANNON. Allow me to say that the matter just read is only a partial statement of the case. The gentleman himself will bear me out in saying that the Quartermaster-General said finally that the work would take from five to nine months; that he wanted to commence it now; that in spite of some disadvan-tages he could work during the rainy season; and that if we fail now to make provision for this work it would postpone the work for another year. Why does not before the House the whole case? Why does not the gentleman be fair and put

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am perfectly willing to have read the entire colloquy between the chairman of the committee and General Ludington. I will read the part to which the gentleman refers:

The CHAIRMAN. What is the season you can work there?
General LUDINGTON. From now until March, April, or possibly May.
The CHAIRMAN. After all, if you have this appropriation by the 1st of February, you could not much more than make contracts?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

[Mr. SLAYDEN] has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask that my time be extended for ten minutes. I hope that the House will indulge me in this request.

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN (continuing the reading):

General LUDINGTON. You might say that we could work until May.

The CHAIRMAN. You have to let the contracts; you could not do anything until you let your contracts?

General LUDINGTON. We would have to buy the lumber and send it out over there, and put it up probably by our own mechanics.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you buy the lumber here or there?

General LUDINGTON. We would buy it on the Pacific coast, probably somewhere on the Sound.

He has since explained to the Committee on Military Affairs that it would be bought in Puget Sound.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it be done on open market or by advertisement? General LUDINGTON. We would advertise for it.

Observe, Mr. Chairman, that these inquiries on the part of the chairman skillfully brought out the fact that every step necessary for the construction of those barracks would cause delay.

The CHAIRMAN. How long would that take?

General LUDINGTON. If we could spare the time, we would advertise for probably a month, but if we did not have the time we would advertise it for half of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. If you put it through under whip and spur by advertising, and your appropriation was made available by the 1st of February, it would be the middle of February before you could advertise, and really it would be the 1st of March before you could get bids in, would it not?

General LUDINGTON. It depends entirely upon when the money was available.

The CHAIRMAN. I am assuming it would be two weeks before this would be enacted. It would be the 1st of March before you could probably get your contracts awarded, and then it would be at least thirty days before you can ship it?

General LUDINGTON. I should think so. We might ship a part sooner, but could not expect to get it all.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the most favorable circumstances it would be the 1st of April before you could ship it, and the shipment would require thirty days, and it would be the 1st of May before you can get the material on the ground?

That was the judgment of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at that time.

General Ludikton. Yes, sir.

The Charrman. The object of asking about this is that it does not go to the merits of the matter, but is to see whether or not, from a practical standpoint, as your season would close before you could get your material there, and that being true it seems to me the committee on the sundry civil in its ordinary annual bill could treat this matter. You could not do much in July and August in actual construction.

Now, I submit it was demonstrated by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, himself, that expedition would have been better secured had that bill gone to the committee to which it properly belonged, and had that committee been permitted to properly belonged, and had that committee been permitted to bring a suitable measure into the House.

Mr. CANNON. The matter does not belong under the rules of the House to the Committee on Military Affairs, it belongs, and is always treated upon the sundry civil bill or the deficiency bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will indicate any appropriation which has been made this year or made by the preceding Congress or at any prior time in the line of the appropriation he suggests here and which will establish the fact that this is a supplement to that appropriation or a deficiency in that this is a supplement to that appropriation, or a deficiency, in other words, I will promptly accept his statement of fact in that regard and give my assent to the legislation proposed. But no such thing can be shown. This is not in any sense of the word a deficiency.

But there is another authority with reference to the construction of these barracks to which I invite the attention of the committee for a few moments. I refer to a communication from Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, major-general in the United States Army, commanding a division in the Philippines, and addressed to the Adjutant-General at Washington, D. C. I direct your attention to the last paragraph:

I have been unable to prepare plans and make careful estimate of cost for want of time to do so, but a rough approximation is stated at $500,000—lumber, rough material, nails, ironmongery, pipe, etc., from the United States. Two hundred thousand dollars should be available by December 1, in order that the dry season may be taken full advantage of. For construction of permanent barracks, quarters, stations, etc., at other points which may be determined upon during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, $2,000,000.

Now, it will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that this sum of $2,000,000 more will have to be appropriated at some time in the future for the purpose of putting up barracks and quarters in these islands during the fiscal year 1903. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if that does not look like a permanent military establishment over there establishment over there.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Weeks] made a statement when he had the floor of the House this morning in which he charged this side of the Chamber with having advocated and adopted the "insurrectos" cause, as he terms it, and called attention to a matter to which I shall revert for a few moments. Now, I repudiate the statement of the gentleman from Michigan—as far as I am individually concerned I repudiate it for myself, or for any other Democrat, or for any gentleman on this side of the Chamber as absolutely unwarranted. I know of no Democratic any other Democrat, or for any gentleman on this side of the Chamber as absolutely unwarranted. I know of no Democratic member and no Democratic citizen who is an advocate of the cause of the Filipino insurrection, so called. That remark of the gentleman was entirely unwarranted and without foundation. We on this side of the House have advocated and propose to stand by the principles enunciated in 1776 by our forefathers, the principles upon which the Government of the United States is founded, and are now concerned, not as to how a departure from such principles will affect the Filipinos, but as to what will be the effect upon ourselves.

But the gentleman from Michigan—and I regret that I could not, on account of the confusion on the floor of the House, hear all that he had to say—read an account of individual cruelty by some Filipino, and, taking that as the text, as the basis of his generalization, he stated as a matter of fact that it was evident that these people were unfitted for free government and that the illustration he gave was evidence of that fact.

Now, in this connection I will ask the Clerk to read the two paragraphs numbered 1 and 2 which I have marked on the morning paper that I send to the desk, and then, Mr. Chairman, after they are read, and after a few brief remarks in connection with them, I shall have concluded what I desire to say upon this bill. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

NEGRO'S FIENDISH CRIME—POURED OIL ON SLEEPING WOMAN'S CLOTHING AND SET HER AFIRE.

WILMINGTON, N. C., January 22.

A horrible tale of the burning to death of a young negro woman, Carrie Kelly, comes from Navassa Station, 4 miles from Wilmington, in Brunswick County. From an ante-mortem statement developed by the woman at the coroner's inquest there to-day it appears that a week ago Louis Myers, colored, went to the woman's house in the absence of her husband and made an improper proposal to her, which she spurned.

The negro went away, but soon returned, and while she was asleep in a chair before the fireplace, he saturated her garments with kerosene and applied a match, the striking of which awoke her. Finding herself enveloped in flames, she tore her garments off and fied. After suffering intense agony for several days, she died yesterday. Myers was arrested by the Wilmington police and is held for the Brunswick authorities.

The Clerk also read as follows:

HUNTING A NEGRO BRUTE—CRIMINAL ASSAULT UPON MRS. ISAIAH LUMLEY, OF WINSTON-SALEM.

[Special to the Washington Post.]

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., January 22. WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., January 22.

A young negro man, whose name has not been learned, criminally assaulted Mrs. Isaiah Lumley, about 9 o'clock this morning, in the woods just southeast of the city. Mrs. Lumley, who is a poor woman and 53 years old, says she wrestled with the negro nearly half an hour before he accomplished his purpose. She was choked until she became helpless.

Officers tracked the brute for some distance, but as yet they have not been able to catch him. Six negroes were arrested and carried before Mrs. Lumley, but she said neither was the guilty man.

Mr. SLA YDEW. Now, Mr. Cheirmon, there is a block Poleral

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a black Roland for the gentleman's brown Oliver. If his predecessors in the early history of the Republican party had reasoned as he reasons to-day I apprehend that the negroes of this country would never have been clothed with the franchise, because these individual acts of cruelty would have been regarded, according to the logic of the gentleman from Michigan, as indicating their absolute unfitness for participating in the Government. I do not believe fitness for participating in the Government. I do not believe that the character of the negro can be established by individual acts of brutality, nor do I believe that the fact that there are fiends among the Filipinos proves their unfitness for government nends among the Filipinos proves their unitness for government or establishes our right to rule them.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to make some progress with this blll, We have devoted a great length of time, without probably very much profit, to the discussion of this particular feature of the bill, and I will ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WANGER in the chair).

regards the pro forma amendment as having been withdrawn.
Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment.
Mr. CANNON. I would be glad, I would say to my friend from Tennessee, that we may proceed with the bill. Since I introduced this bill we have had two full days and over of general debate; a great deal of latitude has been allowed. I could, of course, have invoked the point of order, but have not done so, because I want to demonstrate, if possible, that we could pass the bill by unanimous consent. It seems to me that the time has arrived that we should make progress with the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that I will not detain the House but for two or three minutes and occupy that time only for the purpose of making a brief reply to the suggestion of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Moody], and also with reference to statements made in reference to the climate of Manila in connection with the building of this post.

Gentlemen, I want to know why we should build a permanent hospital—for that is what this is—or a home for our well and sick nospital—for that is what this is—or a nome for our well and sick people in Manila, when the well ones are coming home as fast as they can get away, and the sick ones are put on our transports and brought back home? Why? Because of the climate there; that is not changed by any kind of a house. Governor Taft, in some one of his reports states—and as all of our officers agree—the sick soldier or citizen is not left in Manila to be cured, but is brought back to the cold climates of his native home in the United States.

Suppose you build this structure there at any price. Why, gentlemen, you will have to bring your sick soldier back home anyway. There is not a man on this side of the House, nor on that, anyway. There is not a man on this side of the House, nor on that, who wants to deprive the sick soldier of a cure for his ailments; who wants to deprive the sick softer of a cure for its animents; but in that climate, if anything will cure him, as a rule coming home does it. But there is not a place anywhere in that island, I believe, with the possible exception of Benguet, a long distance away, where his health would be improved, and I doubt somewhat if that is much better than Manila. But to get to Benguet we must build an expensive railroad. we must build an expensive railroad.

Why, our distinguished friend Governor Taft lives in the best house in Manila, but he is coming home for his health. He was sick when I left there. General Funston is coming home for his health, and must stand, we are informed, a second operation in a few days. Judge Ide has gone to Japan for his health. What about all of the people who get sick in the Philippine Islands? They do not stop at Manila to get well. They come home to their native, cool climate.

Now, another question—about Jolo and slavery. It is immaterial to me what the President did on that subject for the purposes of my statement. I have heard it disputed, I have heard it said, that he did not strike out the provision with reference to slavery in Jolo. Whether he did or did not, I want to state this, that I went Jolo. Whether he did or did not, I want to state this, that I went to Jolo and I there saw slaves. I went to one of the best-managed schools that I think I ever saw. I was talking to the teacher, who is the ex-secretary of the present Sultan of Sulu, the ex-secretary of his deceased brother, who was the Sultan preceding him, and the ex-secretary of the deceased father of the two once Sultans. I asked him if slavery still existed there, and he said, "Yes; there is a slave boy there now—in the schoolroom." Said I, "Bring him up here; I want to see him." He was brought up—a bright little brown boy. I asked him his name and he told me. I asked him his history and he said he would write it to me; and he did write it to me, and I have it at my office now. I asked the principal to write me his history and he did it, and that is now at my office.

The substance of it was that this boy, 12 years old, had been sold six times, and they were threatening then to sell him again. What did I do? What did I feel I should do, Mr. Chairman? I went immediately, as quick as I could find a military official, and told him of the fact, because, regardless of what the President of the United States and the Republican party believe, I believe that if any part of the American Constitution went to the Philippine Islands the portion prohibiting slavery went there, and I wanted it enforced. I could not find the leading officer of the post, who is a most charming and splendid man, but just as the ship was it enforced. I could not find the leading officer of the post, who is a most charming and splendid man, but just as the ship was in the act of raising anchor I did find a gentleman of his staff on our vessel. I took him aside and related the facts to him just as I have stated them here—told him where the boy was, what the principal of the school said, what the boy said—and this officer said to me, "Oh, we have no right to interfere with that." I said, "What, no right to interfere with slavery in the Philippine Islands?" He said, "No; we have a contract with the Sultan of Sulu that prohibits us from interfering with slavery, with their religion, or with their harems here."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Were there any courts there under our authority?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Nothing but military there. Every-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Nothing but littled thing was military there.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Had anybody ever attempted to sue out a writ of habeas corpus for anybody?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I heard nothing of the writ of habeas corpus and heard nothing of the Constitution there until I spoke about it. I saw no civil judges and heard of none. The I spoke about it. I saw no civil judges and heard of none. The place, Jolo and the island, was under military rule and had to be. Our army was there and could have squelched slavery, but they dare not. The bloodiest of conflicts would follow, our people said, and this ex-Secretary Wahab, if we undertook to destroy their customs—and slavery is one.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.
Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to two or three sentences from the most recent report of the Philippine Commission upon that subject.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should be happy to hear that, Mr. Chairman, but I hope my time will be extended. I am just stating these facts as I saw them; but the gentleman may go

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I do not want to extend the gentleman's time, but I want to direct his attention to this language: The insular government has never recognized slavery in any way, and the Moros were informed that it would never do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think this matter ought to be stated as it really is, and I hope I may be indulged for a few

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to be recognized after that. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make this statement, so we will know exactly what condi-tions are in this Moro country. The ancestry of the Moro came from Borneo—they are not Filipinos. You have heard of "The man from Borneo," I know.

[Mr. GAINES of Tennessee addressed the committee. See Appendix.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Loud having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had on January 23, 1902, approved and signed a bill of the following title:

H. R. 3239. An act providing for the free transportation of all mail matter sent by Mrs. Ida S. McKinley.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WARNOCK. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that, after watching the debate which has taken place in the last two or three days, the House is determined to go on until they stop from sheer exhaustion; and in order that that operation may be hastened, I contribute my mite toward the utter prostration of this body mentally and physically.

I congratulate this side of the House on the fact that on yesterday they were able to accomplish, in spite of points of order and in spite of a seemingly irresistible flow of eloquence on the other side of the aisle, two or three additions to the bill which I believe to be just and proper.

I was convinced from the arguments made on the other side that it was just and proper, even if I had not heard a word from this side. We learned from the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee what a fearful, unwholesome, and unhealthy climate they have in the Philippines. We learned that the best housed and best sheltered and best cared for people who are there are unable to resist the effects of the malaria of that climate for a longer period than a few months. Why, then, should gentlemen making such assertions and such arguments hesitate to give to the soldiers who are there representing this Government that needed shelter which they say they must have if they are to stand the effects of that climate?

I believe that it was fortunate that the majority supported it at the time of its passage, because I saw the remarkable spectacle of 100 on the other side when the motion was finally brought for consideration before the House stand up and deliberately refuse their assent to the appropriation providing for the shelter of the soldiers. I saw also another remarkable thing that surprised me more than did the vote of the hundred gentlemen, and that was when the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, evidently a profound lawyer, evidently a man who regards a point of order when raised not simply as a partisan matter, but would regard it as purely a judicial matter, when he undertook to state, as he did state in a clear manner, his reasons for sustaining what he believed might be the action of the Chair, that he believed that the point was not properly and well taken as against the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, I observed that he was drawn into a colloquy with his brethren on the other side, which colloquy resulted in such questions being propounded that whenever he was unable to give such answers as suited their political contents. ical bias that his answers were received with jeers and hoots; and I almost expected to see the gentleman from Georgia, notwithstanding his record as a Democrat, read out of the party. And I was further surprised when I heard the speech of the gen-And I was turther surprised when I heard the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee, I believe it was, this morning, that gentleman covertly casting a sneer upon the action of that other distinguished Democrat from the State of New York because, in answer to a suggestion made to him by another, he had replied, "I would be paralyzed before I would consent to withhold my vote for the support and comfort of an American soldier."

Now, Mr. Chairman, this has been to me a great matter of surorise, and I would not, as I said before, call attention to it except that I see that the House is determined to be brought to the very verge of extreme exhaustion before we can proceed with a vote. I have heard a great many things uttered on the other side that have sounded strangely to my ears in connection with this debate. Gentlemen have, in advocating their claims about the situation in the Orient, indulged in many remarks about the cost, about the great expense, about the loss of life. Is that the only reason, gentlemen, of your objection? I remember very well that when the declaration of war was made, as between the United States and Spain, there was no hesitation in regard to the cost, no hesitation in regard to the blood that should be shed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to give notice that when my friend from Ohio has completed his remarks and my colleague, Mr. Moody of Massachusetts, has a moment to read an extract from the report, I shall have to insist on the enforcement of the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks that the time of the gentleman from Ohio may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. WARNOCK. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, there was no expenditure of money and no expenditure of blood that stood in the way of the gentlemen on the other side advocating the Spanish war.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WARNOCK. Certainly.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman remember the conditions that prevailed at that time—the order to the per the conditions that prevaled at that time—the order to the reconcentrados and the Weyler order? Was not that the condition then, and has not the Government drifted into the present policy of the Weyler order in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. WARNOCK. If the gentleman had waited until I got through, he would find that I would touch upon that very point.

The war with Spain was waged by common consent as a war for humanity. It was stated, and has been stated on this floor repeatedly during the arguments that have been made under this bill, that the Spanish war was waged because of the fact that the cries of the oppressed came up from across the narrow sea be-tween us and Cuba, so that we were compelled as Americans to interfere. While it is true that at that time the Philippines were not thought of, or dreamed of, yet I declare to-day that the same motives that actuated the people of the United States when the Spanish war was declared, in my mind are equally as forcible today as then.

What is the object of the occupation of the Philippines? Some gentlemen say that it is for the purpose of aggrandizement; for the purpose of extending our borders and acquiring more territory. Gentlemen, when that is urged as the reason, are met with this argument—that we would be entailing an enormous expense and loss to the Government. I never felt, for one, that that pense and loss to the Government. I never felt, for one, that that was the real purpose of the occupation of the Philippines. I never felt, for one, that the United States of America had engaged in the enterprise because of the fact that it was to bring to us any profit in the way of dollars and cents, but I have felt, and there are tens of thousands of people in the United States that feel as I do, that that enterprise was engaged in, not for the purpose of aggrandizement, but for the purpose of humanity, as much as our interference in the case of Cuba was a case of humanity.

The other day I was reading in one of the newspapers that Mr. Carnegie, the great millionaire philanthropist, said that the only satisfaction a man could have out of his wealth was that he might benefit somebody, that he might help somebody. So I believe that the United States should take possession of the Philippines, and maintain the flag of our country in the Philippines, not so much for the purpose of benefiting the United States as for the purpose of accomplishing some good or help to somebody. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], in the argument which he so ably and forcibly presented, demonstrated the beneficent mission of the United States in the Philippine Islands.

I know it is easy for gentlemen to argue, and to theorize, and speculate, and to criticise the policy of the Government; but, gentlemen, if that policy results in establishing schoolhouses on the hillside and in the valley; if that policy accomplishes results in changing the hut of the jungle into a happy home; if that policy results in lifting up the degraded, oppressed, and superstitious people and giving to them the light of our western civilization, then, I say, let us accept that responsibility and share in the beneficent results. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, what is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair has been out of the chair for a few minutes. Will the Committee of the Whole indulge him in a statement?

Mr. CANNON. I think unanimous consent was substantially given that after the completion of the remarks of the gentleman given that after the completion of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, and a word from the gentleman from Massachusetts, the consideration of this bill would proceed in order.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would ask whether it is the right of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to name two or three gentlemen who are to speak, and to give notice that after those gentlemen have spoken he will move to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN. During the last thirty or forty minutes the debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent outside of any

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not finished his statement. At some other point in the bill—at the conclusion of the reading of some other paragraph—the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] could be recognized to make a pro forma amendment, upon which he would be entitled to speak for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will now give absolute notice that after my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Pierce] has occupied his time, after my friend from Indiana [Mr. Miers] has had a few minutes, and my friend from Massachusetts a few minutes—none of them exceeding five minutes—from that on I shall insist that the consideration of the bill shall proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] asked for recognition before any of the gentlemen whom the gentleman from Illinois has named?

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend from Missouri want five minutes?

Mr. COCHRAN. If I had not wished for time I would not have addressed the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I was trying to get unanimous consent for some arrangement. The gentleman knows that if the point of order were made that debate is not in order upon the pending amendment it would be sustained. I am trying to make progress with this bill if I can, without any undue friction. I have no desire to cut the gentleman off.

Mr. COCHRAN. May I suggest that I do not obtrude myself upon the House with sufficient frequency to justify the gentleman from Illinois in selecting me for exclusion in the matter of debate? Mr. CANNON. Oh, there is no necessity for any irritation.

Mr. COCHRAN. Not at all.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois now includes in his statement the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read the orders of the President to General Bates and General Otis:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, October 27, 1889.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, October 27, 1889.

SIR: The President instructs me to advise you that the agreement signed August 20, 1899, between Brig. Gen. John C. Bates, representing the United States, of the one part, the Sultan of Jolo, the Dato Rajah Muda, the Dato Attik, the Dato Calbi, and the Dato Joakanain, of the other part, is confirmed and approved, subject to the action of Congress provided for in that clause of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain which provides "The civil rights and the political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded to the United States and Spain which provides "The civil rights and the political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress."

Hence it is desired that you report upon the character of this Moro slavery, in order that the institution as existing may be fully appreciated. The number of slaves secured by the Moros through capture or by purchase from other bands, tribes, or races, and now held by them, and the number of them in use who have voluntarily or involuntarily entered the condition of slavery might be approximately stated.

You will conduct your inquiries with a caution prescribed in the inclosed War Department communication, making full report of the results of the same to this office as soon as practicable. You will also extend your investigation, with a report thereon, to other Philippine islands inhabited by Moros and where they have planted their domestic institutions.

Very respectfully,

Major and Inspector-General, U.S. V. Military Secretary

Very truly, yours

Very truly, yours,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Maj. Gen. E. S. Otis, Commanding United States Forces in the Philippines, Manila, P. I.

Then here is a message of the President to the Senate when the papers in this case were demanded, and the President makes no papers in this case were demanded, and the President makes no allusion to any exception having been taken on his part. Whatever may have been his private views, they are not set forth, and the contract or agreement was absolutely approved by the President through the order of Secretary Root and also the Adjutant-General of the Army. He did call attention to the fact that it was in violation of certain parts of the Constitution, but affirmed and confirmed the contract that had been made. I have read here the order of both Secretary Root and the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Is that not in force to-day?

Mr. PIERCE. Certainly. To show that it is in force, I will read what the Commission says—the present Commission—the Taft Commission:

An attempt at the present time to use force in securing the liberty of Moro slaves would inevitably provoke a flerce conflict with a brave and warlike people, and, so far as the slaves themselves are concerned, would meet with little appreciation. If, on the other hand, the refusal on the part of the Government to recognize slavery is persisted in, and the taking or acquiring of new slaves is prevented, the question will settle itself in a generation without bloodshed or the bitterness necessarily engendered by an armed strife.

It should be understood that slavery in the Philippines is by no means confined to the Moros. It is common among the wild Indonesian tribes in the interior of Mindanao and among the wild Malayan tribes of northern Luzon. If the evidence of credible witnesses may be believed, some of the wild tribes of Mindanao sacrifice their slaves to propitiate their heathen divinities.

I might read on, Mr. Chairman, but to what purpose? These I might read on, Mr. Chairman, but to what purpose? These are the facts of the case. It is not necessary to proceed further. I am not reading this with any partisan purpose, but simply in order to answer, to some extent at least, the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Moody].

Mr. BARTLETT. And the gentleman from Illinois as well.

Mr. PIERCE (continuing). Oh, well, all on that side who have taken the extraordinary position that has been presented in this delaste.

I do not think the matter can be questioned that slavery exists there, which is recognized as an institution by the present representatives of the President—the Emperor of the Philippine Islands. Because, Mr. Chairman, we as a Government have provided, under a Republican majority in the House and the Senate, that we should delegate all the powers that we have, and all that we may have, to the President of the United States in these islands a power that is held by no sovereign in Europe-and this power is absolutely given to him under a resolution as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] in justification of this $500,000 appropriation embodied in this bill. That is all there is of it. There can be no question of the facts.

I say that this power exists there, and it exists because the head of the Republican party sees proper to let it exist there. It exists because his personal representatives say they dare not permit the Army and the Navy to be interfered with, because if that were done bloody strife would be organized by a brave and a warlike people. That is the fact of the case as presented to us here. Now, gentlemen, what are you going to do with the question? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Here the hammer fell.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, no man of intelligence can entertain the slightest doubt that the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States extends to amendment of the Constitution of the United States extends to the Philippine Archipelago and protects the people of those islands who dwell there within the jurisdiction of the United States. I have been astonished, as I have never been astonished before during my membership of this House, by the utter lack of candor which has been displayed by my colleague from Tennes-see in the remarks which he has just submitted to the committee. I have been surprised that he should so mutilate and curtail a public document while reading from it in support of his republic document while reading from it in support of his remarks—a document which is at the disposal of all of the members of this House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see exactly how the matter stands in regard to the pending controversy in the Philippine Islands. Upon the 20th day of August, 1899, General Bates, in command of our forces in that part of the Philippine Archipelago, made an agreement with the Sultan of Sulu. In that agreement there was no recognition or perpetuation of the existing slavery prevailing in the islands except that which arose by implication on account of the tanth article of that agreement, which is as follows: of the tenth article of that agreement, which is as follows:

Any slave in the Archipelago of Sulu shall have the right to purchase his freedom by paying to the master the usual market value.

So that the provision there relating to slavery was one intended for the benefit of the slave himself and looked to his freedom.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to interrupt the gentleman for a question

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I prefer not to be interrupted just now

Mr. SULZER. I want to ask the gentleman a question just on that point.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Very well; I will hear the

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman how long it would take a slave, working for nothing, to earn $20 to purchase his freedom?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It would take so long that I utterly repudiate the tenth article of that treaty, as it was utterly repudiated by the President of the United States. Undoubtedly the article was meant kindly, the intention was good, and it was thought to be for the benefit of the slave himself.

Seven days afterwards the President of the United States made response to that agreement which had been entered into by Major-General Bates, which was a response made in a letter of Mr. Root, the Secretary of War, to General Otis, a part of which only has been read by the gentleman from Tennessee. He read this much of the letter:

SIR: The President instructs me to advise you that the agreement of August 20, 1899, between Brigadier-General Bates, representing the United States, and the Sultan of Jolo, etc., is confirmed and approved, subject to the action of Congress provided for in that clause of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain which provides: "The civil rights and the political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded shall be determined by Congress."

But he failed to read the very next words in that letter of instruction, which I now read for him, and they are these:

And with the understanding and reservation, which should be distinctly communicated to the Sultan of Sulu, that this agreement is not to be deemed in any way to authorize or give the consent of the United States to the existence of slavery in the Sulu Archipelago, a thing which is made impossible by the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The only recognition of slavery in the Bates convention was by implication, and the President of the United States repudiated the implication in the language which I have read to the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Did the President, when he sent that document to the Senate in response to a resolution demanding it, say or intimate to the Senate that he was opposed to that treaty?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. With the convention he sent his own repudiation, and I am reading from his message to the Senate in which he transmitted the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like a little more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. There is something more in this letter

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, as the gentleman has his time extended, will he allow me?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me finish this and then I will yield. The Secretary further wrote at the same time:

When you communicate to the Sultan the above-mentioned understanding, the President desires that you should make inquiry as to the number of persons held in slavery in the archipelago, and what arrangement it may be practicable to make for their emancipation.

Now I will yield to my friend.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not know—of course he does know—that General Otis, in his report in reference to matters in the Philippines, stated distinctly that slavery did exist in those islands, and that it would be impossible to destroy it except by war with the whole archipelago, and that he recommended no interference with those reconder. he recommended no interference with those people? And I want to ask if the Republican Congress, in either branch of it, ever instituted any measure or suggested that slavery should be in any way abolished over there?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I do not know what General Otis said with reference to this subject. Very likely he said that which the gentleman from Georgia has quoted. For my part, I would not consent to the existence of slavery anywhere under the American flag for one day, and if I had the power and authority to do so I would employ every soldier who wears the uniform of the United States to wipe it off the face of the earth. [Applause.] But I say that gentlemen get up here and misrepresent the action of the President and misrepresent the attitude of the Commission at the present day.

I was surprised again to hear my friend from Tennessee read a part of the report of the Commission for the present year. I was surprised that he should have omitted to read this:

The insular government has never recognized slavery in any way, and the Moros were informed that it never would do so.

I was surprised that he omitted this:

The Filipinos formerly held as slaves have practically all been liberated by our troops. It is possible that a few may still remain in bondage in the Lake Lanao region. Slaves who desire their freedom and who seek protection at any military garrison receive it.

While I regret that there is a single remnant of slavery left in the Philippine archipelago, I am encouraged by these signs of improvement, and I am glad to learn that whenever a slave in the archipelago seeks the shelter of the American flag he finds under its folds the same freedom that we enjoy in our own country. [Applause.

Mr. MERCER. Just in this connection I think it is well to have it go into the RECORD that on the island of Mindanao Dato Mandi, one of the leading chiefs of the Mohammedan people, liberated his slaves on his own volition. He stated to me while I was there that they cried when he liberated them, and he assured them that he would take care of them anyway; that the Government of the United States was against slavery, and that if the Government of the United States was against slavery, he was against it and would not have any more slaves under his control, and that he would use his argument and his influence with the datos in other parts of Mindanao as well as in the Jolo group to have all the slaves held by Mohammedans liberated.

That is going on to-day, and while I was at his house in Zamboanga a little girl 14 years of age was brought in—a slave. Her mother desired her liberation. Dato Mandi took her to the military headquarters and delivered her to the Government of the United States, thus liberating another slave. He says that it is to be the policy of the people down there, and that they intend to be friendly to the United States Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. What did he do with his wives? Did he

Mr. BARTLETT. liberate them, too?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, an important fact has been emphasized in the course of this debate—the enormous responsibility taken by the country in attempting to hold the Philippine Islands. Yesterday I called attention to the fact that our expenditures in the maintenance of the army there have already aggregated about three hundred millions, and that in twenty-five years we will pay out enough to extinguish the present national debt. I propounded a query then and I repeat it now—a question which the country, sooner or later, will demand shall be answered: How are we to recoup this sum? Where are compensatory profits to come from?

In the course of the debate to-day we have been given a glimpse of what may be expected in case an attempt is made to abolish slavery in the southern portion of the archipelago. Without the shadow of a doubt, in order to uproot human slavery in the dominions of our good friend the Sultan, we must go to war with a people renowned for their bravery.

The war upon the Christian inhabitants of the northern islands has been going on for over two years, has cost enormous sums and thousands of precious lives, and the end is not in sight, yet, in comparison with what we may expect when the crisis is reached in the southern islands, is mere child's play.

Mr. Chairman, do not facts like these clearly indicate that in saddling upon this country enterprises so hazardous, so expensive, so profitless, the leaders of the party in power rushed blindly into a field in which only disasters can be harvested?

The gentleman from Massachusetts insists that the President expressly repudiated the inference—derivable from the treaty with the Sultan—that slavery is to be recognized in the Mohammedan islands. But, Mr. Chairman, the fact remains that several hundred thousands of slaves are at work on the plantations of Mindanao and Jolo. These slaves are Christians and the children of Christians who were carried from their homes in the northern islands and enslaved because they were Christians.

It should be borne in mind that the occupation of the southern islands by the Moors occurred almost simultaneously with the occupation of the northern islands by the Spaniards. In the northern group the people became Christians; in the southern group Mohammedans. Soon the Mohammedans came to regard it as a religious duty to enslave the heretics. Forays of Moro pirates occurred year after year for nearly two centuries, and thus the slave pens of the Mohammedans in Mindanao were recruited by captives from the Christian islands, which are now the scene of our military operations. This continued until 1876. So, gentlemen, not only is it true that slavery exists in our new possessionsit is undeniable that the slaves over whom our flag floats are Christians and the children of Christians who were torn from their homes by Mohammedan masters, who think that nothing so pleases heaven as bloody warfare against all who reject the re-ligion of Mohammed. There are Christian slaves in Mindanao who were captured and carried there as late as 1875.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who insist that this accursed system can not permanently find shelter under the American flag, and therefore we must look forward to a war with our present friends, the Moro slaveholders, far more expensive, more prolonged, and fought with greater loss of life than our war upon the Christian inhabitants of

Mr. Chairman, only one of the Spanish generals who, during Spain's protracted occupation of the islands, have seen service there ever undertook to carry on war in the interior of the southern islands of the Philippine Archipelago. Weyler, when he was Governor-General, thought that all of his predecessors had been weak-kneed and weak-hearted, and that he was the very man to go down into that country with a Spanish army and put all the Mohammedans to rout. He mustered all available forces, and with a numerous army, with blare of trumpets and streaming banners, boldly invaded Mindanao.

The forces of the Sultan retreated into the interior and Weyler

The forces of the Sultan retreated into the interior and Weyler followed. At the end of four weeks sickness and disease had worked such terrible havoc on his forces that he was glad to retreat to the seashore. Professor Worcester, of the Michigan University, who saw the remnant of that great army when it came back to be shipped to Luzon, describes the horrors of that campaign as almost inconceivable. He tells us that the Spaniards had not priests enough to shrive the dead. They sent to the reighboring islands for priests to perform the right of the character. had not priests enough to shrive the dead. They sent to the neighboring islands for priests to perform the rights of the church over the victims, and yet the death rate was so great that hun-dreds were buried daily unshrived. The priests could not per-form the offices of the church as rapidly as the men died.

Yes, gentlemen, it is true that when we get through suppressing the demand for independence and home rule in Luzon, we must liberate the slaves in Mindanao, and officers of our Government plainly tell us that nothing short of a bloody war will do the work. It is charitable to say that the men who plunged the country into this business were ignorant of the history of the Philippines and their people. They did not know that there is neither kinship, affinity, nor community of interest between the people of the northern and southern islands. The northern islands are peopled by Christians, the southern islands by Mohammedan. The official language of Luzon is Spanish—in Mindanao it is Arabic. The institutions of one group are the institutions of Christianity, the institutions of the other are the institutions of the Mohammedans. institutions of the other are the institutions of the Mohammedans. The Tagalo is docile, honest, peace loving, and deserving of all consideration. The Moro is barbarous, cruel, and predisposed to violence and war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to have three minutes more.
There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. And yet, in order to avoid war, the Administration made a treaty with the Mohammedans. Why, in the name of common sense, was war forced upon the Christians of Luzon? The Mohammedans said: "Leave in our hands the multiple of the common sense and the same allow up to nicipal government, don't interfere with our harems, allow us to own slaves, and pay our Sultan and his flunkies $10,000 a year, or fight." We agreed to their terms. The people of Luzon were told to lay down the arms so long borne in a glorious struggle against Spain for independence. They are still told that they must unconditionally surrender.

Why have we dispossessed these people of the civil rights for which they contend—the right to be free and to govern their own country in their own way—continue to have and saddle upon them a government devised by aliens, when we knew that such a course would necessarily result in a bloody war, and then, in dealing with Mindanao's Mohammedans, who hold enslaved Christians in hopeless bondage in their households and fields, consented to the sovereignty of the Sultan, to the continuance of his government, and the maintenance of the monstrous "twin relics of barbarism"—slavery and polygamy?

The gentleman from Massachusetts says that in a letter to General Bates or somebody else the President expressly said that this Government gave no assent to the maintenance of slavery But the fact remains that slavery has not been interfered with; slavery exists in the Philippine Islands. The appointees of the President charged with the duty of governing the islands recommend that it be not interfered with. Failure to interfere with it authorizes the conclusion that this advice is being followed. And it is absolutely certain that when finally the work is undertaken it will cost hundreds of millions of money and thousands of lives to abolish slavery in the Philippines.

taken it will cost hundreds of millions of money and thousands of lives to abolish slavery in the Philippines.

Now, about one thing there can be no question. The constitutional prohibition of slavery applies to the Philippine Islands. The Supreme Court has decided that the writ of habeas corpus, the guaranties contained in the bill of rights, and guaranty of equity in taxation contained in the Constitution have no application to the Philippine Islands. But it should be borne in mind that by the Constitution slavery is prohibited, not only in the United States, but in "any place over which the United States has jurisdiction." Thus the official oath of every officer and agent of the United States in the Philippines, and the official oath of the President and his advisers, forbids consent to the perpetuation of slavery in the Philippines.

Mr. Chairman, is it not anomalous that there should exist the shadow of foundation for the charge that the Republican Administration is sanctioning human slavery in a country owned by our

All. Chairman, is it not anomalous that there should exist the shadow of foundation for the charge that the Republican Administration is sanctioning human slavery in a country owned by our Government and governed by appointees of a Republican President? Gentlemen—you who so frequently boast of the achievements of your party and claim that its particular mission was the emancipation of the slave—how far have you wandered from the principles of Lincoln, Trumbull, and Greeley, and the other founders of your party? Shame upon the pretensions of gentlemen who pose as advocates of liberty while making war upon a Christian people because they desire to be free, and make a treaty with similar tribes professing Mohammedanism, by which they are allowed to retain their "peculiar institutions"—slavery and polygamy. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], the chairman of the committee, the other day announced what I assume to be the policy of the Republican party and of the Administration: "We shall hold the Philippines forever and a day." I do not subscribe to that policy. I think it means too much. I think it means not only that we shall meet our obligation in the Philippine Islands to the Filipinos, to the people of the world as well as of the Republic, but it means more. It means subjugation. It means government of a people against their will. It means a colonial system attached to the Republic of the fathers that I thoroughly believe to be un-American and unwarranted; a poor financial investment; one that will cost the people many millions of money and many thousand lives. Besides, it may eventually entangle us with other nations that will give us great trouble.

I am equally opposed to building permanent barracks over in the Philippines. I am opposed to doing anything that will permit the party in power, six months from now, to say, "We have expended money over there, and we can not withdraw." I would rather make temporary pro vision temporary should have prevailed; also the one that provided for an itemized statement of the expenditure.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have no time to discuss whether the gentleman's position or mine is right. The limited time allotted me only permits me to say that I do not believe the boys who wear the blue, the men who fight under the Stars and Stripes, the men who follow Old Glory, are called on to settle that question either in favor of the position of the gentleman from Illinois or the position taken by myself and my colleague. Whenever they enlist, wherever the command is given by the commander of the Army and Navy—who is the President of the United States—it is the duty of every American soldier to obey that command. It is the duty of every American soldier to obey that command. It is the duty and the pleasure of every American citizen to support the boys who thus follow the flag. He is the American soldier; he is the hero of all Americans; and I will vote every dollar in the Treasury, if need be, for his maintenance, care, and support. While he carries the flag every American citizen desires that he have every comfort that money can afford.

The question in this amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois is whether it means, as was said by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Cummings], money distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], money for the preservation and protection of the soldiers of the Philippine Islands. If it does, I am for the amendment. But does it? The language is "for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men in the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States."

The amendment says it is. The distinguished gentleman who occupies the chair said it did when he ruled on the point of order. The chairman of the committee, standing on the floor of this House, says that is the purpose of the amendment and it is to be used for that purpose.

used for that purpose.

Aye, he says more; that it is necessary that it should be so used. If all that the distinguished gentlemen on the other side have said If all that the distinguished gentlemen on the other side have said as to the condition of the climate, as to the condition of the Philippine Islands, is true; if the soldiers are not cared for by the general appropriations; if their wants have not been anticipated and provided for, it is the fault of the other side of this Chamber. This side has voted with you for every appropriation offered for that purpose. I for one am now willing to concede to you the right to vote a half a million dollars for the maintenance, care, support, shelter, and protection of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands.

It is only another argument, I submit, Mr. Chairman, in favor of the position taken by the minority—that you have the soldiers over in the Philippine Islands not properly cared for, not following the command in behalf of humanity or freedom.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

has expired.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I would like two minutes more, Mr.

Chairman The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks for an extension of two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana (continuing). Not following a command distorted by the will of the fathers, they are there fighting mand distorted by the will of the fathers, they are there fighting under the flag, and they are doing their patriotic duty, and should and must have the support of the Republic. I will not repeat the strong language of the gentleman from New York, but will say there is not a dollar in the Treasury that is too good or dear for the boys who fight under the Stars and Stripes. If they do not need it—if it is for the purpose of establishing a permanent barracks—I would rather the gentlemen framing the bill and those who advocate its necessity and avow a different purpose, should take the responsibility. If they mean to say one thing and do another—if they mean to misappropriate this money—they must do so, and account to a wronged people. If money—they must do so, and account to a wronged people. If it is used for the support of the soldier, the people will not begrudge it

If, on the other hand, it is a subterfuge, if it is used for permanent barracks, for the purpose of establishing a permanent establishment in the Philippine Islands, for the purpose of controlling them outside the Constitution and outside the bill of rights, withthem outside the Constitution and outside the bill of rights, without their consent and against their will, it will be giving the lie to the resolution and to the declared purpose on the floor of the House, then the responsibility is with you and not with us. But when you present a resolution that says it is for the maintenance and support of the boys upholding the flag, and when you say it is needed for their care and support, I take you at your word. I will vote for the amendment, and I will allow time to prove whether you are sincere and whether the resolution means what it says. [Applause].

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Pay: For extra pay of one enlisted man as assistant and attendant at the library, at 50 cents per day, for thirteen days during each of the fiscal years 1900 and 1901, $26.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, in lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "for thirteen days."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Transportation and recruiting, Marine Corps," for the fiscal year 1900, $221.02.

For the purpose of making an in-ast word. We have now reached Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. quiry, I move to strike out the last word. We have now reached a part of the bill which covers appropriations on account of the a part of the bill which covers appropriations on account of the Interior Department. I wish to ask whether there is any appropriation made in this bill for a Mr. Acker? The Secretary of the Interior recommended, on page 2 of his letter, an appropriation to pay this man what seemed to be double salary. He was detailed to fill a position different from the one which he legally held.

Mr. CANNON. That is not in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I withdraw the proforma amendment.

ment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Capitol: For work at Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, including wages of mechanics and laborers, $16,905.75.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the paragraph just read insert—
"Hereafter the office of Architect of the Capitol shall be designated as Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

For the substitution of tile for slate on all roofs, and of copper for galvanized iron in all gutters and conductors, of the twelve buildings of the hospital extension now under contract, $37,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. For the purpose of making an inquiry, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois how many buildings are now in course of construction at the St. Elizabeth Asylum?

Mr. CANNON. The work is under contract.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Are the new buildings being erected on the old site?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is it proposed to construct any more buildings on that site; and if so, how many?
Mr. CANNON. I can not answer that question. We propose, however, to utilize the ground that the Government owns on the two sides of the road. two sides of the road.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is it proposed to put some of these buildings on the opposite side of the road?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. As I understand, new buildings are to be constructed on the opposite side.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No exchange of lands has been made?

Mr. CANNON. I understand not. Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I withdraw the pro forma amendment

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I renew the amendment. I desire to read from page 711 of the annual report of the Secretary of War for 1901 a brief paragraph showing the effect of the climate of the Philippines on the minds of white people over there.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that the proposed discussion is not germane to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman does not want to hear how many people have gone crazy over there on account of the climate of the Philippines?

Mr. CANNON. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Without reading, I would like to

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Without reading, I would like to insert this paragraph in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. No leave to print has been given.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to place this small paragraph in the RECORD. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Tennessee can, perhaps, accomplish his purpose

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC LAND SERVICE.

Salaries and commissions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, on account of the fiscal years as follows:

For the fiscal year 1902, $100,000.

For the fiscal year 1901, $12,000.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 4, on page 35, insert the following:

"That the number of land offices and land districts in the district of Alaska is hereby reduced to one; and the land office in said district shall be continued at Bitka. If at the time of the taking effect of this act there should be any business pending in any of the offices to be discontinued such business shall be transferred to the Sitka office."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. VREELAND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2063. An act granting a pension to Ida S. McKinley; and
S. 2510. An act extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Oacoma, S. Dak.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL,

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT. OUT OF THE POSTAL REVENUES.

Rural free delivery: For experimental rural free-delivery service, including pay of carriers, horse-hire allowance, supplies, and mechanical appliances, $217,300.

Mr. HILL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 23 and 24, page 40, strike out the words "two hundred and seventeen thousand three hundred dollars" and insert in lieu thereof "$491,040, to enable the Postmaster-General to efficiently maintain for the remainder of the current fiscal year the rural free-delivery service."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment will be as follows: In the first place, in my judgment, the present compensation of the rural carriers in this Department is not such as would enable the Postmaster-General to maintain the service efficiently during the present fiscal year, and my amendment will provide a sufficient sum to enable him to increase the compensaprovide a sufficient sum to enable him to increase the compensa-tion of these carriers from the 1st of March to the 1st of July at the rate of $600 a year, instead of $500 a year as is now paid to them. It would also enable him to add to the number such addi-tional carriers as may be necessary, in the judgment of the Post-master-General, during the months of April, May, and June. In other words, on the 1st day of March there will be 7.763 carriers employed in this service and doing the work of the Department, and it is the desire of the Department as I understand it to proand it is the desire of the Department, as I understand it, to provide additional facilities for 300 more carriers for each succeeding month of this fiscal year, the amount of money required to meet the additional expenditure being the amount provided in the amendment, namely, $283,740.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the hope that it will pass the committee, so that justice may be done to these men engaged in this character of work.

My reason for presenting the amendment is simply this: I conceive, of course, numberless instances all over the country, but as an illustration I have taken a single route in the county in which I live, and ask the attention of the committee to the fact that during the past year there have been nine resignations of carriers from that route on account of their inability to meet their expenses at the present compensation. To my personal knowledge the amount that is paid to these men is not sufficient to keep their horses and equipment up to such an extent as to enable them to perform the service on these various routes.

I have taken from the 53 carriers who are engaged in doing the work for the Department in that county a statement from each one of them as to the actual cost of the service involved, and have divided it, first, as to the amount they received from the Department in the way of salary from the Government, and, second—I may state that these reports are made largely under oath, a few of the carriers neglecting to attest their statements under oath but the statement shows, first, the amount they received from the Government; second, the amount that they received from outside parties for carrying papers, packages, and for doing a kind of ex-press business along the routes; and the next item is with refer-ence to the cost of feed and keeping of horses; the next, the cost of shoeing them; and the next, the repairs to wagons and vehicles employed in the service, the cost of keeping horses and supplying others in their place in case of sickness; and then the depreciation of the plant, embracing horses and vehicles, harness, and so on, which I take to be not less than 25 per cent of the investment of horses and carriages, harness, and other equipments necessary to the service.

I have been informed that this estimate of 25 per cent upon the

I have been informed that this estimate of 25 per cent upon the cost of the investment is entirely too small. I am informed by members of the House who are cognizant of the facts that a horse would not endure this service on an average route of 25 miles a day for a period of four years, but I have made the calculation for the horses on the basis of four years' service, which, I think, is in excess of the actual time they may be used. I will state that I have here reports from the various carriers as to the cost of horses they have been compelled to hire because of sickness or inability of their own horses to perform the work. I have an account of the number of horses killed in the service. I have made no account of that in this estimate. But as a general proposition I assume the calculation I have made is a correct one and that there will be found to be a regular depreciation in horses and investments of all kinds, including wagons, harness, and the equipments necessary for the service, of 25 per cent. I have taken all of these figures and will give the results briefly of the tabulation which I have made from them.

The result is substantially this: I have 33 reports out of the 53 that are complete, so that they can be made a part of the tabulation. Of these, 30 reported the number of horses. Twenty-five out of the 30 have been compelled to have and keep two horses in order to carry on the work. Five are trying to do it by the use of one horse only. Taking the entire amount of receipts—and I think the receipts have been more liberal than they would be taking the country by and large—the receipts of carrier No. 1 for six months were $115.05 over and above the amount paid by the Government of the United States; No. 2, $19.92; No. 3, nothing; No. 4, $30, and so on. Taking the whole list, the average of the receipts for the six months was $28.42, or 18 cents a day received for outside work in addition to the amount paid by the Government. for outside work in addition to the amount paid by the Government.

I think that is a higher average than would obtain in a less thickly settled county than the county of Fairfield, in the State of Connecticut. Thirty-two men got for six months' work $2,805.73 over and above the actual amounts paid out by them, as reported to me under oath in this tabulation, or an average of 56 cents a day; and taking out from that the amount which they received from outside parties, not from the Government, it brings the compensation down, for 25 miles average route, to 38 cents a day paid by the Government. That is the compensation these men are receiving under the amount paid by the Postmaster-General of $500 a year, requiring in 25 out of 30 cases the use of two horses requiring in 25 out of 30 cases the use of two horses.

Now, I submit to the House whether this is a fair computation when I say to you that this is based on a showing made for the average cost of feeding and bedding a horse of 35.7 cents a day; an average cost of shoeing a horse 5 cents a day; an average investment in horses of $91.40, the actual amount paid by these men; an average investment in wagons and sleighs of $65; an average investment for harnesses, etc., of $24.60. Taking that on what I claim to be an exceedingly low basis, the amount received by these carriers in peculiarly advantageous circumstances has been 38 cents a day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for five minute

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Now, I am aware that this is a new service, but I want to say to you that in the beginning of this service, when the petitions began to come in from Fairfield County for the establishment of rural free delivery, I went to the Post-Office Department and said, "I do not like to see this thing done in that way. I want it done on a business basis. I do not believe in the establishment of isolated routes. I wish you would wait in Fairfield County until you can ruralize the whole county and do it economically and efficiently."

The Postmaster-General looked over the maps, looked over the situation in regard to the post-offices, and decided that he would ruralize Fairfield County, and it was the second county in the United States that was so treated. Having the system well established there, I do not think I need say a word as to the desire of the people that it may be continued, and continued efficiently; but, having it done under these circumstances, I believe that the tabulation I have submitted here is as favorable to the Government as it can possibly be made.

Now I know very well that the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads [Mr. LOUD] will reply to what I have said, and will state that all over the United States the Government is now employing horses, wagons, and harness under contract, all ready for a Government employee to step on the box in the morning at 7 o'clock and use it during the eight hours of work in the city deliveries and return it at night, and that the whole thing is kept and maintained, feed of the horse, care of the horse, repairs, and depreciation, for $225 a year, and that this showing of mine makes it appear that it costs about $380 to do that thing, leaving but 38 cents a day or $118 a year for the rural free-delivery carrier.

In reply to that I simply have to say that it does not need any argument to convince business men, such as are here before me, that a livery-stable keeper with 40 or 50 horses in his stable—with more or less of them unemployed all the time—can take one horse today and another to-morrow that is unemployed and let them out by contract cheaper than a man can take a single horse, furnish his own barn, care for him himself, and drive him continuously 25 miles every day. 25 miles every day.

Now, I am not prone to extravagance. I do not think from my action in this House in the time I have been here any gentleman will accuse me of being extravagant. So far as economy for the United States Government is concerned, I do as I would with my personal affairs, and am always on the side of economy and on the side of the Government in that respect. But I say it is absolutely impossible to have this service efficient (and the people will not submit to its abrogation) on a compensation of $500 a year for a man to furnish his time, his own labor six or seven hours a day, and furnish his horse, and give satisfaction to the people or to the Government

Mr. BURKETT. How much does your addition raise it? Mr. HILL. This amendment will provide for additional compensation for the months of March, April, May, and June, a total of $33.33\frac{1}{2}.

Mr. CURTIS. That is only $50.

Mr. HILL. Only $100 a year. It would give him a compensation of 65 cents a day with additional pay provided for in this

Mr. BURKETT. A raise of from $500 to $600?

Mr. HILL. A raise of from $500 to $600 for the balance of this year. Now, that is the proposition, and I am ready to submit to any question that anybody may ask in regard to the matter. It seems to me a plain business proposition that the service must either stop or else you have got to pay enough to keep it up. I am opposed to paying more than $600. I believe it can be done for that sum. I believe it can be done efficiently for that sum. I recognize that it is a fact that in some way or other there can be brought about a service which can be so adjusted that there shall be a sliding scale of pay.

I recognize there is no reason why in some portion of the country where hay is $18 a ton and oats 50 cents a bushel and a horse costs $100, that carriers should be paid the same price as where hay is only $4 a ton. I believe it is not impossible for a method to be found by which the cost of this service could be reduced. At first it was claimed that the men could not be promptly paid, and it ran on from twenty to forty-five days before they got their pay. I went to the cashier in the office at Bridgeport, and said:
"Why can not you pay these men on the first day of the month?"
He said, "I can;" and I asked him if it would cost any more to pay them on the 1st of the month at Bridgeport than two or three weeks afterwards by checks from Washington. He said, "Not at all; I can do it just as well then as not."

I wrote to the Department and asked why they could not pay those men here at Bridgeport for Fairfield County at the end of the month instead of sending the accounts down here to go through the month instead of sending the accounts down here to go through the hands of the clerks in the Auditor's office, and then six weeks afterwards have the money sent back to the men. They wrote back to me, "No; it can not be done." I wrote back to them and said it could be done—I knew it could be done; that if they could pay the forty city delivery carriers and the railway mail clerks between New York and Bridgeport, they could pay these rural carriers.

Afterwards they wrote back that it was a good suggestion, and that it would be done, and the result was about three weeks ago an order was issued so that every rural free-delivery carrier in the United States will be paid at the principal city of the State in which they reside, and on the 1st day of February, gentlemen, all your carriers are to receive their pay within five days from the time work has been done. In our State we have weekly payments. We do not believe that it is well to withhold pay from men for thirty days and then hold it thirty days afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

gentleman may be extended five minutes.

gentleman may be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, the question is this: How can your amendment increase the salaries of the carriers when it is now fixed, arbitrarily, by the Department?

Mr. HILL. I know what the disposition of the Department is, or I knew what it was four weeks ago. I know that the disposition of the Department was to increase this to $600: I personally tion of the Department was to increase this to $600; I personally know it. What the result will be of changes there I do not know; but the provision under which the service is carried on is as

Mr. MADDOX. Why do not you provide in your amendment what shall be provided.

Mr. HILL. Because we can not make an amendment in committee. It is new law, and the amendment would not be in order.

Now, in reply to the question, I will state the way in which this ervice is carried on. It is as follows. In the last appropriation bill is this clause:

For experimental rural free delivery, including the pay of carriers, horse-hire allowance, supplies, and mechanical appliances, $3,500,000. There is no restriction. The Postmaster-General can expend the money as he sees fit. If he sees fit to pay $500 a year, he can do so. I see fit to move the amendment so that he can make it $600° a year. Will he do it? I have not the slightest question but that he will comply with the wishes of Congress.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Upon what does the gentleman from Connecticut base the suggestion that if he gives him this additional appropriation he will apportion it to the carriers?

Mr. HILL. What also can be do?

Mr. HILL. What else can he do? Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. He could establish new routes

Mr. W.M. ALDEN SMITH. He could establish new routes and have the present petitions acted upon.

Mr. HILL. I understand, but the amendment I have offered provides for the establishment of 900 new routes in addition to the compensation. Now, it has been intimated that the Postmaster-General could not use the money in that way.

master-General could not use the money in that way.

Mr. MADDOX. I did not make any such intimation.

Mr. HILL. Well, it has been intimated by others.

Mr. MADDOX. I did not make the intimation. I asked what information the gentleman from Connecticut had in regard to it.

Mr. HILL. When that intimation came to me I took the liberty of getting a little information on the subject myself. It has been strongly intimated to me that if this is adopted in the House it might elsewhere be amended so that the money will go to increase the compensation of the carriers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman does not his amendment provide specifically that the carriers' compensation shall be increased?

Mr. HILL. I could not so provide in this amendment, for if I did, the amendment would be objectionable to the rules of the

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am in favor of increasing the compensation of the carriers.

Mr. HILL. I can simply say in response to the gentleman that if the amendment is adopted it will go to the Senate. The Senate is not bound down by the rules that are in force here, but they can amend the amendment and make it specific, so there will be no trouble upon that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Is it not a fact that wherever the free-rural delivery has been established the receipts at the

mr. HILL. So far as I know, it is unquestionably so.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understand from the gentleman's amendment and what he has stated upon the floor that the pay now averages about 38 cents a day, and his amendment will increase it to 60 cents a day?

Mr. HILL. It will increase it to about 65 cents.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That is very little for the service rendered.

Mr. HILL. Yes; but the service is still, in the language of the bill, experimental.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. As I understand, the route can not be shorter than 20 miles or exceed 30 miles.

Mr. HILL. Yes, that is the theory, but I have a route in my district that is 36 miles long.

Mr. McCLEARY. Under the new rule they can not be over 25 miles

Mr. HILL. Yes, I understand they are reconstructing it.

Now, I would be glad to answer any questions that any member may ask, otherwise I will close.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want to say that I do not wish to be misunderstood as antaggarizing any proposition to increase the salarings but I do he tagonizing any proposition to increase the salaries; but I do believe that we can get at it in a more direct and perfect manner if we allow the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to bring in a bill for that purpose than we can to pass an amendment to this deficiency bill.

Mr. HILL. In reply, I want to say that I have not the slightest evidence that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads proposes to bring in any bill applicable to this fiscal year. If this is done at all it must be done on a deficiency bill providing for this fiscal year. There is nothing in the amendment that carries it beyond the 30th of June. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will undoubtedly bring in an appropriation bill providing for the maintenance of the service after the 1st day of July. I say, from my own knowledge and experience, it is not possible for the Postmaster-General to maintain this service in the state of efficiency in which the people of the country desire it to be maintained on the present appropriation, and it must either be discontinued or you must vote to increase the appropriation.

appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition this time for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Connecticut, if I can get him to exercise his discretion, to withdraw his amendment. This amendment is not subject to a point of order, or I would have made it. It proposes to increase the appropriation for rural free delivery by $200,000, in round numbers. In general debate I explained that there was an increase here of $220,000 on this appropriation recommended for the service of this year which enables the service to go on 1,800 routes. That is ready between this and the 1st of July.

It seemed to me and it seemed to the committee that that ought to be done. That would care for the service so far as expense is concerned the balance of this year. Now then, there is the discretion in the Postmaster-General to fix the salaries of these carriers, and he has fixed it at $500. That is the salary now. I think it is likely that it ought to be more. If the gentleman had put in a provision by which he provided it should be $600 a year, or not exceeding $600 a year, I would have made the point of order that it was legislation. But the gentleman is a very good parliamentarian, and he now moves to increase it by $200,000, hoping that the Postmaster-General will take the debate as an indication that Congress wants to increase the salary for the balance of this

A gentleman asks, "If it ought to be done, why not do it now?"

I will tell you my objection to doing it now. This is a bill which appropriates money for the public service for the balance of this fiscal year. Legislation upon this bill is prohibited. Legislation is not in it. I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and other members of the committee that that committee is considering this whole question, that it has jurisdiction of this whole question, and will undoubtedly report for the consideration of this House a bill upon which this whole matter can come up, and on which we can, after due discussion and freedom of amendment, fix these salaries as they ought to be fixed.

Mr. CURTIS. Would not an amendment to increase these salaries be subject to a point of order on the Post-Office appropria-

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.
Mr. CURTIS. In the last Congress a point of order was made against a similar amendment. I offered an amendment to increase the salaries of these men to $50 a month, and it was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The Post-Office Committee originates the Post-

Mr. CANNON. The Post-Office Committee originates the Post-Office appropriation bill. A legislative amendment offered to that bill would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. CANNON. Let me go on. Let me answer the objection which is made. I will be entirely frank. An amendment to fix these salaries upon the post-office appropriation bill would be subject to the post-office appropriation of the post-office app ject to the same point of order. But the Post-Office Committee has legislative jurisdiction and it is its duty, and I am informed that this function will be exercised. It is its duty to report a legislative provision dealing with this subject.

Mr. CURTIS rose.
Mr. CANNON. I ask my friend to restrain his zeal until I have answered his question.
Mr. CURTIS. It seems to me you are dodging the question.
Mr. CANNON. Not at all. The Post-Office Committee has legislative jurisdiction, and this is a matter of such importance that there is no doubt a bill dealing with it would, if reported, receive due consideration; because this House, when gentlemen on both sides want to do a particular thing and the measure is presented in proper order, generally finds a way to do it.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. I decline to yield. I will yield later. Gentlemen seem unwilling to allow me even to state my objections to

I say it is not in order on this bill to fix salaries. The gentleman from Connecticut now seeks to increase the appropriation, and, as he states, his object is to increase the salaries of these officers.

officers. Well, that does not bind anybody.

Mr. HILL. Of course not.

Mr. CANNON. He says he thinks the Postmaster-General will increase the salaries. To undertake to deal with the question in increase the salaries. To undertake to deal with the question in this way is a halfway measure. We must meet this thing as it ought to be met. Let us meet it in an orderly way. Let the Post-Office Committee report a bill regulating this service and fixing these salaries. The committee, as I am informed by its chairman, is now considering a bill of that kind.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. An affirmative measure.

Mr. CANNON. An affirmative measure proposing legislation which will exhaust this question. I believe these salaries ought to be increased to $600—possibly $650. Other gentlemen may think the salary ought to be $700. Others, including my friend from Kansas [Mr. Curtis], think, no doubt, that the salary ought to be $900. Doubtless there are some gentlemen here who think it ought to be $1,000. Now, in view of this variety of opinion, let this House have a chance to pass upon a legislative measure in an orderly way under the rules. in an orderly way under the rules.

For the reasons I have indicated I hope the gentleman from Connecticut will withdraw his amendment and let this matter come up in the way I have suggested. If he does not see proper to do so, I will ask the House to defeat his amendment and let this matter come up to be dealt with, not by patchwork, not by indirection, but upon its merits. It has legs enough to go through mairection, but upon its merits. It has legs enough to go through so far as it ought to go.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if a point of order would have been sustained against this paragraph of the bill, I would have made it. This is a bill to provide appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902. There is no pretense that this item is for a deficiency in the service. The letter of the Postmaster-General, requesting this appropriation, states that it will enable him to provide for some 1,000 additional routes which are being presently questing this appropriation, states that it will enable him to provide for some 1,000 additional routes which are being urgently demanded from him by Representatives in Congress.

I would have made the point of order, Mr. Chairman, not because I am opposed to the rural free-delivery service, not because I am opposed to its proper extension, not because I am opposed to paying proper and ample remuneration to those employed in it, but I would have made the point of order because I do not believe that those contlamen who represent in this House rural dislieve that those gentlemen who represent in this House rural dis-tricts should be permitted to procure legislation for their districts in ways which would not be permitted to members representing city districts.

For many years there has existed in the post-office at the city of New York a condition of affairs which is a disgrace to this country. The clerks and the mail are so huddled together there that men are in danger of their lives in remaining in the service. am personally acquainted with two men who have been compelled am personally acquainted with two men who have been compelled to resign from this service under the advice of their physicians because of the unsanitary condition of the post-office at that city.

Mr. KLUTTZ. What salaries were they getting?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ten or twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. KLUTTZ. And we are asking only $600 for men who ride all over the country in all seasons of the year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If you will undertake to accomplish your purposes in a proper manner. I will you with you, but I will not

Mr. FITZGERALD. If you will undertake to accomplish your purpose in a proper manner, I will vote with you; but I will not support a proposition to give you improperly what we can not get in a proper manner, although we are justly entitled to it.

The post-office receipts at New York City for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, aggregated the enormous sum of $10,384,623.21. Of this amount, $6,549,764.12 was net revenue. The post-office at New York City is not only paying for the rural free-delivery service as it now exists, but the profits arising from the New York office would almost pay for that service if it were doubled.

Mr. Chairman, for many years a bill has been pending here to office would almost pay for that service if it were doubled.

Mr. Chairman, for many years a bill has been pending here to appropriate $2,500,000 in order to provide a suitable office for the postal business in the city of New York. Such a bill has been reintroduced this session by my distinguished colleague, Mr. Cummings. It has not been acted upon yet. Such a building is demanded by the needs of the service in that great city. The post-office building there is placed upon ground for which the Government of the United States never paid a dollar. That ground was ceded to the Government by the city of New York. It is time that some attention was given to the needs of that great city in legislation here. Some consideration should be given on account of the some attention was given to the needs of that great city in legislation here. Some consideration should be given on account of the immense revenues that flow from the postal service in that city. I am tired, Mr. Chairman, of listening to members on the floor of this House objecting whenever it is proposed to put up a public building in New York City, or to increase the pay of the men who are engaged in the public service there, or to do anything for the public service in that city, which is so justly entitled to consideration at the hands of Congress eration at the hands of Congress.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will my colleague allow me an interrup-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.
Mr. CUMMINGS. That bill, to which the gentleman refers, has been already reported by the Senate committee, and I have every assurance that the House committee will make a favorable report on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be, and I hope it will be. But whenever a proposition is made to better facilities in New York members of the House seem to forget the immense amount of members of the House seem to forget the immense amount of revenue that is paid to the Government from that great city.

Here is a proposition in the amendment pending to provide for the extension of the free-delivery service throughout the United States, a matter which belongs to the Post-Office appropriation bill. It should be considered and reported by the Committee on Post-Offices, and not inserted in this bill.

Let me further call attention of centlemen to the feat that the

Let me further call attention of gentlemen to the fact that the net revenues of the New York post-office amount to within $1,156,592.78 of the gross revenues of the Chicago post-office, and that the net revenue of the New York office is more than 25 per cent greater than the net revenue of the Chicago office—the second largest in the United States. This is a condition of things which should appeal to members to be liberal in their treatment of that great city, to provide adequate postal facilities there, not only for the service of the city itself, but in the interests of the people throughout the country. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman that I believe he is one of that great number who have hidden behind Mr. Loud and said, "If it were not for Mr. Loud, the gentleman from California, you boys would get more salary." It is a cowardly device.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to you that any moment that the said, "If it were not for Mr. Loud, the gentleman that I believe he is one of that great number who have hidden behind Mr. Loud and said, "If it were not for Mr. Loud, the gentleman that I believe he is one of that great number who have hidden behind Mr. Loud and said, "If it were not for Mr. Loud, the gentleman that I believe he is one of that great number who have hidden behind Mr. Loud and said, "If it were not for Mr. Loud, the gentleman from California, you boys would get more salary." this House will act upon a bill covering this question when it comes within the reach of the House, and it will come within a very short time, they have certainly forgotten the conditions which have prevailed here before this proposition was reached on this bill and before the matter was brought to the attention of the House by the pending amendment. There were then probably 20 members on the floor of the House. But you are all here

[Laughter.]

This question, in my opinion—and I appeal now to the calm and deliberate judgment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], who not long since sought me in an appropriate place, at the entrance door of the United States Treasury, and impressed upon my mind the fact that this or some similar appropriation should be made, and at the same time sought to impress upon my mind that he was one of the original economists of the House, and was at all times in favor of economical administration, and yet was largely in favor of the increase of this rural free-delivery service. [Laughter.] Now, the whole difficulty is in the conditions which surround the gentleman. He has got some carriers—a good many of them—in his district and they have votes, and he wants to capture them, perhaps, before the primaries, coming off in his district before next July.

But, seriously, Mr. Chairman, this is the most aggravating and important question which confronts the Congress to-day. Country members from all parts of the Union have stood in a solid phalanx between the question of payment to the city carrier of $1,300 a year and the public Treasury.

Now, brethren, you are criminally implicated yourselves. You can not shirk the responsibility any longer, because you are asking for money yourselves. At the present time there are 8,000 rural carriers and 8,000 substitutes. Next year there will be 16,000 carriers and 16,000 substitutes. In five years there will be 16,000 carriers and 16,000 substitutes. In five years there will be at least 40,000 carriers and 40,000 substitutes—80,000 voters distributed in all our districts, demanding of us that their salaries be increased to what they may call an adequate compensation.

Think of it! And I am just offering the suggestion here to-day that you have got to face it. Rural carriers are human—

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does the substitute get any

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does the substitute get any pay at all?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no. I do not mean to intimate that the substitute gets any pay, but he is a substitute. He hopes to be the carrier; he is interested just as much as the carrier is in increasing the salary of that position.

Mr. SHATTUC. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me again.

Mr. SHATTUC. I want to vote intelligently on this, and I want to ask one question.

want to ask one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. LOUD. I can not hear what the gentleman says, and I prefer not to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. SHATTUC. I want to ask just one question.
Mr. LOUD. Oh, well, shoot it in.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman decline to yield or does be rield?

he yield?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I can listen to his question quicker than I can stave him off.

Mr. SHATTUC. If we vote against this amendment, will you bring in a bill increasing these salaries?

Mr. LOUD. Our committee are considering that proposition at this very moment.

Mr. SHATTUC. Will you favor it, then?

Mr. LOUD. I will not assume to say on this floor what I will do hereafter as regards that or any other proposition.

Mr. SHATTUC. For this year or next year?

Mr. LOUD. I have heard that the gentleman from Ohio recently said on the floor of this House sotto voce, "you will never get any increase as long as it is in the hands of that man," meaning myself.

Mr. SHATTUC. And I believe it, too; I believe every word of

it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Before the gentleman leaves this subject I should like to say—

Mr. LOUD. I never will get through; if I am interrupted I must have unlimited time.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to call attention to the fact that

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to call attention to the fact that your committee has twice reported that bill to the House.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say that we are at this moment considering this proposition. And let me repeat again the greatest question to the average membership of this House that has ever come before it. Let me call to your attention again the grand army of possibly 100,000 men in all our districts who in the near future are to come demanding an increase of salary. They are but human. They would not be satisfied with six hundred, nor seven hundred, por eight hundred, nor mine hundred, nor with a thousand, nor with a thousand nor with a thous nor eight hundred, nor nine hundred, nor with a thousand, nor with eleven hundred, nor with twelve hundred.

with eleven hundred, nor with twelve hundred.

If the carrier in the city, walking upon the sidewalks, furnishing no horse or wagon, is to be permitted to receive $1,000 a year, then the rural carrier will impress upon your mind, having the votes all the time to impress it, that he must have more than the city carrier. The city carrier will get $1,200, and you will see in ten years your rural delivery service costing, instead of the $15,000,000 estimated by the Postmaster-General, at least $125,000,000 per year.

$15,000,000 estimated by the Postmaster-General, at least $125,000,000 per year.

Now, let us face this question as men clothed with responsibility, and let the committee endeavor to frame such legislation, which they will do in a very short time, as they can present to you, and that you will rise to the occasion, confronted as you are to-day with but 8,000 carriers and better qualified to legislate now than you will be when there are 100,000. The statement of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill], the original economist, who, like others, is always economical in everybody's district except his own, is not worth the paper on which it is written.

He figures out an expense of $381 or $382 a year for horse hire for each carrier. Let me say that it is more than we pay, more than is paid to-day in any part of the United States where we contract with men to deliver to the carrier in the morning a wagon and horse competent to do eight hours' work and that does do eight hours' work. If one horse will not do it then two are furnished. hours' work. If one horse will not do it, then two are furnished. We are not paying for this anywhere nearly as much to the men who are in this business for profit.

Now the gentleman assumes to convince this House that where the rural carrier takes his own time to care for his horse and charges nothing for such service, that he can not do it for less than $382 a year. Now, let this House have a proper opportunity to perfect legislation upon this question, and not endeavor to tie the hands of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads as to whether the salary is to be a fixed salary or not. Some routes ought to be paid more than others. The legislation must be well digested.

The gentleman ingeniously says that if we drive the wedge in a little, the Senate having no rules which they enforce, they will finish the job and not rule it out, and that it will come back here and not be subject to the point of order, and we here can then determine that question as to whether we will give the rural carrier six, seven, eight, or nine hundred or a thousand dollars a year. The gentleman says he is sure the Post-Office Department will increase the salaries of these carriers. I hate to state what another man would do; yet yesterday in conversation with a man whom I think has the power, he said he would not during this year increase the salaries of the letter carriers unless directed so to do by Congress to do by Congress.

Now, we started this service at $300 a year. We had good service. Upon that basis the Postmaster-General made his estimate. There were no complaints heard throughout the country on account of the salary. We raised it to $400 a year. Complaints began. We raised it then to $500 a year, and complaints multiplied. A civil-service order was issued by the President last November putting the rural-delivery service in the classified service, and complaints multiplied until I question if there is a member on the floor of this House that has not in his possession a letter or paper in the corner of which is, "National Association of Rural Free Delivery Carriers."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

extended until he concludes his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the House that the rural carriers think to-day they are in the classified service. They are not; think to-day they are in the classified service. They are not; they think they are. The order was issued, but it was withdrawn, and will go into effect, unless it is recalled, on the 1st of February. Since the issuance of that order they have organized, for what? They are before you to-day as an organization of civil-service employees, making their first demand of $750 a year as the minimum salary. I have studied this question. I have laid awake nights thinking over it. [Laughter.] I endeavored to figure out an adequate basis of pay. I recognized an increase of selery had to be made.

salary had to be made.

I think on some of the routes the salary is not adequate. may be enough for some, too much for others, and not enough for others. Then I began to figure out on the mileage basis, on what it would be a mile per annum, and reduced it to figures based on the system of pay to the railroads. Then came the immortal petitioner, a Government employee, to demand his rights as one of the sacred and faithful. "You can not touch us, so long as we perform our duties; you can not remove us without charges; we belong to the grand army that is organized for a raid upon the public Treasury. We have votes."

Thoughts began to revolve in my mind that it might be possible to avoid placing in the civil service of our country a hundred to avoid placing in the civil service.

thousand men, surrounding us day and night, with their relatives here and there and their friends here and there, with the eternal pressure that must continually be used against every single member of Congress. Now, then, in the abstract every member of Congress is honest. We all want to do what is for the best interests of the country if we have the courage. That is the only thing we lack.

I have been lacking in it all my life. I am a coward. while I was in the Army, and I was regarded as a fair soldier, did I enter an engagement without fear, and my first thoughts were to seek an avenue of escape, but I never had courage enough to to seek an avenue of escape, but I never had courage enough to run away. [Laughter.] And I regard myself as big a coward as I ever was. Then again, we are members of Congress. We are on the pay roll and glad of it. We are prominent citizens. If we shall go back into private life we go into the sear and yellow leaf, we are "has-beens;" while here we are in the public gaze; we are here legislating for seventy or eighty millions of people. We are here legislating for seventy or eighty millions of people. We are recognized as part of this great nation, and I desire to remain here. I want to stay here as long as I can. I do not think it will be long

I think oftentimes I may not maintain my seat here long; but so long as I do stay, regardless of whatever the vote or condition in my district may be, if I am convinced that any man or set of men in the Government employ are receiving a greater compen-sation than they could receive in commercial or private life, I will do all in my power to resist their demands there and here. [Loud applause.] When I go down, as go down I must sooner or later, I will go down with my own self-respect, the sweetest or later, I will go down with my own self-respect, the sweetest morsel you can sleep with as time may come and go in the quiet and solitude of a peaceful home.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman—

ter.] When I get poetic I wish the gentleman would not break in on me. [Laughter.]
Mr. SIMS. I beg the gentleman's pardon.
Mr. LOUD. Now, I know we would all like to relieve ourselves from the responsibility, if this service could be performed as well as it should be in some other manner, and not have this large army of employees in the civil service permanent for life. I believe that now, at least in the infancy of the service, at the very threshold, we would like to shake the future responsibility if it is possible. I believe that this committee will within the next month present such a measure to you here that after manner. next month present such a measure to you here, that after ma-ture and deliberate consideration, looking into the future, what must inevitably confront you, the large army of men in your own district having votes, that we can present a measure to you that will relieve us in the future from some of the importunities that now beset us on every hand. You remember how my friend from New York, representing a large city, got back at a few mem-bers from the country—saying substantially that you had not helped him for years for the relief of men who had votes in his district.

Now, you are all together. What will you do when you have 250,000 of them, surrounding the country member and the city member, capable of defeating any aspirant for Congress, any present member of Congress for his renomination, if they shall so will it. They are human, and they will demand of this Government as large a salary as they think they can get. And to my friend from Kansas: You will have to go out to your home and you will have to be for them. If they want $1,000, or if they want $1,500, you will have to be for them or they will beat you.

Mr. CURTIS. I believe that we ought to pay these men what it is worth to carry the mail. I think it is an outrage to make them carry it for $500 a year and require them to furnish their

Now, let me say I am heartily in accord with the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from Kansas. I believe that when we present this measure that I speak of to the House—Mr. NEVIN. But that is for next year.

Mr. LOUD. Some gentleman says that is for next year. You can make it immediately available, if you are anxious.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from California allow an integration?

interruption?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.
Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from California feel that he knows the temper of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads sufficiently well to say that at an early day in this session of Congress the committee will report a bill carrying legislation, for the consideration of the House, fixing the classes or the pay, one or both, of these rural free-delivery people? And can he say further, if he answers in the affirmative, that he, and so far as he believes, his committee will compare the constant of the say with a say of the same with a say of the say of the same with a say of the say of the same with a say of the say of the same with a say of the say of the same with a say of the say of the same with a say of the say believes, his committee, will cooperate, if necessary, with other members of the House in reaching it for consideration, even to the point of asking a special order?

Mr. LOUD. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that the first proposition we have in view is to frame this legislation and put it on an appropriation bill if we can get an order from the Committee on Rules to submit to the House making such legislation in order on an appropriation bill, within the next thirty days. If that can be secured then it is our purpose to report within the next thirty days legislation upon this subject.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask my friend, considering the temper of this House, the universal feeling, including the gentleman from California himself, that these salaries ought to be increased on both sides of the House, does the gentleman think there is any doubt about the House getting the opportunity to consider it in connection with the general Post-Office bill.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think so, and let me say again that while the gentleman from California has been accused up to this moment of suppressing Congress and holding it back, I do not believe I could do it on a rural free-delivery proposition like this if I was inclined to, and I am not. This House will ultimately do what it wants to do. As great a man as ever occupied the Speaker's chair, who had often been accused of suppressing this House and holding it back in all things he did not approve, used all his energies to prevent the Spanish war, but when you were in earnest you brushed him aside and had your way as you always will when you are in earnest. He reposes in all his dignity in the quiet of his home, believing yet that he was right, and we are wrestling with the grave problems resulting from that unfortunate conflict. No; you will do what you want. Do not try to delude yourselves or your constituents that we can stop you if

Mr. SIMS. I wish to ask the gentleman from California in all seriousness whether he believes that any uniform salary, fixed upon a uniform basis of the number of miles traveled, could possibly be just, in view of the fact that in some localities there are splendid roads, and in others very bad roads?

Mr. LOUD. I do not believe that any salary upon such a basis would be equitable. It could not be. The service upon a route of 25 miles in one locality may be worth $250 a year more than upon another route. But if you propose to fix a salary, a salary fixed upon a mileage basis is the most equitable.

Now, I will divulge to gentlemen who listen to me what I have figured out, and submitted to members of the subcommittee. found that a compensation of $24 per mile per annum upon a route of 25 miles resulted—strange as it may appear, after a good deal of figuring-to exactly $600. And if we were to fix a salary, that is about the basis I would have. For 30 miles the amount would have been $720; for 20 miles the amount, of course, would have been less in proportion.

But I think we can present a measure which will give general satisfaction after it has been thoroughly examined. I am availing myself of this opportunity to submit my views to individual members; and I hope they will take them home and sleep upon them. I believe that the only reasonable solution of this question is to put this service out by contract. I hear numbers of gentleman say "No." I hear gentlemen referring to the star-route

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingston], I believe, says "No." Of course, he has a great many carriers in his district, and he does not want them to lose their positions. But, let me and he does not want them to lose their positions. But, let me say, the star-route service as enforced to-day by the Post-Office Department limits the bidder to the route. No one man can any longer take 100 or a thousand contracts. The bidder must agree to attend personally to the service. The last letting in the first district was upon that basis. The letting for the fourth district, the western section of the country (they are now going over the bide) will be given the same basis. bids) will be upon the same basis.

I want to give you an idea and want you to think upon it. We would have the legislation on this subject so carefully guarded that the man taking the contract must live in the district and must personally perform the service. Our committee are willing to surround the legislation on this subject with all necessary safe-guards. We have not finally determined the question. I have only taken it up with you now because so many gentlemen are here, and I want them to think of the proposition we are sub-mitting as we have thought of it, keeping in view at all times the large army of Government employees, with their constant de-

The contract system, in a district where the service was worth a thousand dollars, would give $1,000, for that would be the lowest bid. In a district where the service is worth but $500 the lowest bid would be $500. We would couple with this legislation the requirement that the bidder must be a man of good moral character, must read and write, and other provisions which might be thought necessary to secure efficient service might be added.

Now, I submit as an abstract proposition that in view of the fact that there are 80,000,000 people who pay the taxes, the Government has a right to secure its service (provided at all times that the service is adequate) at as low a price as it can possibly be done for.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. May I put one question to the gentleman?

Mr. LOUD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understand the gentleman favors the contract system?

Mr. LOUD. So far as we have gone, that seems to be the only escape for us.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The present law provides that the carrier may be designated, or rather indicated, by the Representative of the district. Now, if this business is let out by contract, how will you ever get a man to go around and carry a petition and get 100 householders to sign it?

Mr. LOUD. Perhaps the gentleman does not understand my proposition. There has to be a petition from the district now. After the application has been examined and the Department has determined that a rural-delivery district ought to be formed, then they must look around for a carrier, and instead of leaving the selection of the carrier, as in the past, to the Congressman of the selection of the carrier, as in the past, to the Congressman of the district, which in many cases has provoked quite a contest, it being claimed, on the one side, that certain people did not get their proper share of the patronage, and on the other side that the carriers did not get enough pay—instead of continuing that system, we propose, when you have reached the point where the carrier is to be selected, that a notice be posted up at every postoffice of the district that bids will be received for carrying the mail between given points, under the conditions and specifications set forth. It will be provided that on a certain day the bids shall be opened. The details I do not care to go into. Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understand that; but how would you find out the hundred householders who are necessary, in the view of the gentleman, to secure this service?

Mr. LOUD. Why, I would ask the gentleman how do they find it now?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. But men will not work for nothing. There must be some way of getting at it.

Mr. LOUD. Who does it now, I ask the gentleman?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Why, the man who has the promise of being made a carrier under the law if he succeeds.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I can only say in response to the gentleman that I never appointed a man or recommended a man for the rural free-delivery service in my district. I have heard of a great deal of patronage in this direction, but I have none. I have but two counties in which postal appointments are made and I have almost enough patronage, I might say, to beat me for Congress every time. [Laughter.]

And I am most forcibly reminded of an incident that occurred

And I am most forcibly reminded of an incident that occurred after the general election of 1896, when we succeeded in regaining our hold on the offices for the grand old party. There was a gentleman who came out to California for rest and recreation, and his name was Joe, but probably it was not my friend from Illinois, and he looked as though he had gone through a thrashing machine. [Laughter.] We had some talk about this question of patronage in the postal service, and I said, "Joe, how are you getting along?" And he replied, "Oh, first class. I have my post-offices in such good shape that I do not believe that I shall lose more than 2,500 votes next time." [Laughter.] I say again that probably he was not my friend Mr. Cannon.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Had not we better discuss the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Well, I am under obligation to my friend from Connecticut, for whom I have much admiration, who endeavors

Connecticut, for whom I have much admiration, who endeavors to call me back to the question at issue before the House.

I think this, Mr. Chairman, is one of the most important ques-The first this, Mr. Chairman, is one of the most important questions you will have to face. Now, gentlemen do not always agree. The gentleman from Connecticut takes one view of the case. The gentleman is a financier—a maker of figures. He has got a sheet before him which he has displayed to the House and which he showed to me. I admire him, and I admit that he knows more than I do about financial matters; but he knows no more about the rural free-delivery service than I do. But let us take this question home and consider it for ourselves from every standpoint, and see what we want to do. and see what we want to do.

But, gentlemen, we have considered the matter and have pre-pared tables upon it. We have consulted with other members and looked into the future with regard to the service. lieve the Government should give the most perfect service available, and that these carriers, and each one of them, should have just and adequate pay for their services. But how are you going to fix that? How are you to determine that price? Now, I ask gentlemen to take that matter along with them and consider it.

I want the House to defeat the amendment of the gentleman to-day, because, as the gentleman from Connecticut says himself, the only object is that they may go to the Senate and have it amended there. I think now I have good reasons to believe that the gentleman won't succeed. I think he will not succeed even by a subterfuge to enact this special legislation which can not be

Now, leave the question to our committee, which is considering it free from all outside complications, and we will bring to you within the next thirty days the question for you to deter-

you within the next thirty days the question for you to determine and give you the result of our best deliberations for you to accomplish, to accept, or to defeat it. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I have simply brought a business question before the House in a business-like way. I have presented facts and figures, and reduced the question presented to a mere mathematical basis. I have introduced this proposition to the members of the House, and asked them to vote for it. The only argument that has been brought against it is that I am doing this in an improper way by improper methods, and for the only argument that has been brought against it is that I am doing this in an improper way, by improper methods, and for the purpose of catching votes. I consider that not only as an insult to myself personally, but to each and every member of this House who has been referred to in like manner. [Applause.]

Now, I do not know the politics of any carrier in my district. I have never asked the question. I think that there are Democratic postmasters still in office in the district. I am a believer in civil-service reform. I am a believer in good business principles to be pursued by the Government of the United States in the management of governmental affairs in every department. This propoment of governmental affairs in every department. This proposition first came to me with reference to the carriers' pay from the patrons of the rural service, and when I met the carriers I put the matter on a business basis and said, I will not ask an additional dollar of compensation for you unless you can submit facts to me that would convince me just as if you were in my

But this is not a question of politics. It is a question of the maintenance of the service, and treated, by me at least, just as I would treat my own personal business. I do not care to reply would treat my own personal business. I do not care to reply any further to that kind of an argument.

Now, the gentleman has said that the question is under consideration in the committee, and that it is his opinion that the committee will bring in a report in favor of increasing this salary to $600 next year. If it is worth $600 next year it is worth the proportionate part of $600 for the balance of this year.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman has misapprehended my statement.

Mr. HILL. I have submitted the facts and I challenge contradiction as to the correctness of the figures that the United States Government is to-day paying in Fairfield County, Conn., to its rural carriers over and above the absolutely necessary sworn expenses of carrying on the service 38 cents a day, and I ask for 27½ cents more for the balance of this fiscal year, and that is all I have to ask

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. HILL. Certainly. Mr. MANN. I understand that all of Fairfield County is included within the rural free delivery.

Mr. HILL. Substantially all; yes. Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman inform us what are the total postal receipts and postal expenditures of Fairfield County?

Mr. HILL. I can not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not as well informed as I expected him to be.

Mr. HILL. I am informed in regard to the business I bring before the House. I am not informed in regard to other people's business

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks that has nothing to do with the matter before the House?

Mr. HILL. I think it has nothing to do with it; yes. This is an established service, and the position I take is that it is absolutely impossible to maintain it efficiently unless the deficiency appropriation bill provides an additional appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, just a word, and I hope to close the debate upon this matter and get a vote. But before we do not a large of the committee for just a word.

vote, I ask the indulgence of the committee for just a word.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman pardon me for just a word?
The gentleman asked me to withdraw the amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?
Mr. CANNON. Oh, I yield the floor, to be recognized in my own right later.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman asked me courteously to withdraw the amendment. I presented the amendment in good faith.

Mr. CANNON. I do not doubt that.

Mr. HILL. Believing it was an act of justice to present this matter to the House, I prefer that the members of the House should decide upon the question of good faith and vote "yes" or "no" upon this amendment. So far as its relation to the committee is concerned, I think it stands in no different position, practically, from the amendment which was offered by the gentlement himself vectories. tleman himself yesterday, which trenched in no way upon the province of the Military Committee. I understand this is the only way in which we can get at it for this year—by an amendment on the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. I have not in my mind for a moment any intention to impugn the motives of the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. I thank you.

Mr. CANNON. I have no doubt the gentleman is doing what he believes to be his duty, and when I asked him to withdraw the amendment it was not from the standpoint of his not having an equitable matter in his mind.

equitable matter in his mind. I want to say that it is not worth while to discuss now the question whether the rural free-delivery service was wisely begun. It is here and it is going to stay here as long as you and I live, and it is going to increase. It is a great service. All of us have many carriers. I do not know how many there are in my district, but I suppose, carriers and substitutes, there are probably 125, and 150 and there is not a single carrier who is getting sufficiently. maybe 150, and there is not a single carrier who is getting sufficient pay. I have not any doubt about that. Five hundred dollars a year is not enough.

Mr. HILL. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. But, after all said and done, there is something in what the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] has suggested. It is a great, growing service that will mount up, I think, to twentyfive, forty, fifty million dollars, possibly more, in the next decade, and it is just beginning. Now, suppose you adopt this amendment and it goes to the Senate and the Senate undertakes, as the gentleman hopes it will do and as the Senate can do under its rules, to amend the provision fixing the salaries and making the gradings. Why, it comes back, and I have charge of it on conference, and there you are. I have not studied this question. I do not know whether it ought to be by contract. I do not know just how much it ought to be. I do not know just what the limitations are. I am as anxious to do the right thing and to do it as early as it safely can be done as any man on the floor of this House.

Now, I believe in the good faith of the gentleman from California. I believe he is always candid to this House, and I believe, in nia. I believe he is always candid to this House, and I believe, in view of what is the sentiment of the House, that that committee will report as he indicates and, under a special order, if the House can get the chance—and if the House wants it they will get it—consider it on a Post-Office appropriation bill. If not there, then upon a legislative bill pure and simple. Let us now, in the infancy of this service, do what ought to be done. I think that is the best way. We have waited twelve or eighteen months; we can wait the balance of this fiscal year and let it begin the 1st day of July. Or we can do another thing.

If it is the sense of this House, when we get invisidation of it.

ay of July. Or we can do another thing.

If it is the sense of this House, when we get jurisdiction of it, to legislate, we could regulate the price of the pay and provide that the pay shall begin from the 1st day of March or February. That is legislation. The appropriation will come as a matter of course when that is done. Now, in the interest of proper legislation, and as one who believes in and will cooperate for the increase of this salary under the conditions, I would be glad if this amendment shall be voted down for the reasons indicated. [Cries of "Vote!"

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MADDOX ro

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are exhausted, debate upon the amendments is exhausted, and, if there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. NORTON. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized. Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I am fully in sympathy with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, and I am exceedingly anxious that something should be done, and done quickly, for this service. I believe that in protecting our service at home we ought to be as zealous in protecting this service as those who serve us abroad. There is no service in the United States that has grown so rapidly in the favor of the people and there is no service so illy paid. I believe there is not a single instance in all the United States where you can find so poor payment mode for service rendered and service demanded as is made. ment made for service rendered and service demanded as is made ment made for service rendered and service demanded as is made for the purpose of rural free delivery.

Now, I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Connecticut. There is a difficulty here. The gentleman was compelled to form his amendment so that when introduced it would not go out under an objection. On yesterday we saw the magnificent spectacle here of an appropriation of $500,000, to be expended under the discretion of the President, for the purposes of housing and sheltering and properly protecting the soldiers in the Philipping Islands.

pine Islands.

Let me suggest to you, in order to avoid the difficulty and smooth down the feathers of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads, that you change your amendment to something like this: "For the proper shelter and protection of the rural carriers of mail in the United States that are lawfully on duty, and said amount of money to be expended at the discretion of members of Congress in the districts in which they live," and there will be no difficulty. [Laughter and applause.] I suggest that you turn it over to the gentleman from Illinois, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and if you will do that there is no doubt that the chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads and all of you will follow and keep in line, marching after the old flag and Uncle Joe. [Great laughter and ap-

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition to increase, as I understand it, the appropriation for rural delivery service to the amount of $200,000. The purpose is to raise the salary of the rural carriers, as the gentleman says. I know, Mr. Chairman, that they deserve more salary than they get, and I fully agree with the gentleman from California that the day is not far distant when there will be a combination, a force, brought to bear on this Congress, under which they will not only get the increase asked for, but a great deal more, unless the system is changed.

The objection I have to the amendment is this: In the first place, we have no guaranty that this money is to be spent or be appropriated to the purpose for which the gentleman says it is intended. The next objection to it is this: There are many of us to-day, especially in the South, who are being besieged in all directions to get agents sent out from the Post-Office Department to go down into our districts and locate these routes which have been petitioned for, and yet we can not get them. I think it might be better to take the $200,000 and use it for the purpose of establishing the routes the people are asking for in every section of the country. In many cases there are a number of applications lying in the office and no agent can be obtained to lay off these routes that these people are justly entitled to, as much so as in any other section of the country where they are already lined with the service.

with the service.

The gentleman from Illinois, as I understand him, says he has already 125 carriers or more. In my district there are about 18 or 20, and in some, I am told, none; yet these applications are pending in the Department, and we can not get agents to lay them off. Still, before the service is scarcely begun, the gentleman proposes to raise the salary of these people. I am opposed to the raising of these salaries until we can have a proper force to put in operation the routes asked for operation the routes asked for.

operation the routes asked for.

Then, there is another idea about it. We stood here and contended that an amendment to this bill making an appropriation for the building of permanent barracks in the Philippine Islands was not germane to the bill, was not in accordance with the rules of this House, and when I heard the gentleman from Illinois to-day, and think of him as I heard him yesterday, I am in doubt whether he is the same man or not. To-day it is all out of order; this is not the right place. Yesterday it was all in order and in the right place. [Laughter.] not the right place. Yesterday it was all in order and in the right place. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. That is exactly the situation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDOX. I know it is the situation, and I am glad to see my friend from Illinois come to the Democratic situation and stand by the regular order in this House; and in order to be consistent I shall oppose the amendment. I hope that this side of the House will oppose the amendment for the reason that I have mentioned. If we are to increase the appropriation at all, I say it should be done for the purpose of employing more agents, so that we can have these routes increased.

Now, we can not amend it to that effect, for it would be subject to a point of order. But we have the assurance of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads that that committee will bring in a bill that will properly adjust the mat-committee will bring in a bill that will properly adjust the matter, limit the sum, and say what the salary of these people shall be.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, representing in part a city that will pay net into the United States Treasury from its post-office receipts this year over $9,000,000, I speak as to the proposition to increase the salary of the rural free-delivery carriers.

I have had some experience in endeavoring to increase the salary

I have had some experience in endeavoring to increase the salary of the letter carriers in the great cities. For twelve years a bill has been before Congress gauging their salary by term of service, limiting the utmost that could be received to $1,200 a year—$400 less than a police officer in the city of New York receives. That bill has been before the House ever since the Fiftieth Congress. In the Fifty-first Congress it was proposed as an amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill, but was ruled out on a point of order.

Then came a Democratic Administration; the chairman of the Then came a Democratic Administration; the charman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was Mr. Henderson, of North Carolina. The bill was reintroduced. He opposed it. His committee turned him down. It reported the bill to the House, but under Democratic rules, remodeled on the Reed rules, it was hung on the Calendar on something like a humped hook. Nobody could detach it. The Committee on Rules refused to report a special order to consider it. Then the Republican party came into power, and my friend from California [Mr. Loud] became chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I fondly hoped that something would be done on behalf Roads. I fondly hoped that something would be done on behalf of the letter carriers of the great cities.

But my friend, who is extremely conscientious and more than economical, and I believe thoroughly honest, and one of the best chairmen that the committee ever had, opposed it. His committee, however, like Henderson's committee, turned him down, and the bill was reported to the House by the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Sperry]. But it went up on the humped hook again. [Laughter.] The Committee on Rules refused to report a special order for its consideration, and it died the death of the righteous. Now, it is up before the House again. And, gentlemen, it will be up before the House until the letter carriers in the great cities of this Union get a fair rate of compensation. I only throw out this history to my friends from the rural districts who are seeking to increase the compensation for the rural carrier. It indicates what is ahead of them. I shall vote for any carrier. It indicates what is ahead of them. I shall vote for any proposition to increase the salary of the rural free-delivery car proposition to increase the salary of the rural free-delivery carriers. I challenge any man to point to my record in this House and show me one single case in which I have voted against any proposition to increase the postal facilities of the rural districts in this country.

I believe in the rural free-delivery system. I believe that rural free delivery is just as important to the inhabitants of the great cities of this Union as it is to the farmers, and I shall always support such a proposition. I hope that while the postal committee is considering measures for the relief of the rural letter carriers it will also take into consideration the effort to increase the compensation of the carriers in the great cities and do instice to both pensation of the carriers in the great cities and do justice to both. That's all.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I was going to add that I would challenge any man in the House to point out an instance where my colleague [Mr. Cummings] ever voted against an increase of salary, and, I was going to say, against an increased appropriation. [Laughter.]

But, gentlemen, as has been said, rural free delivery has come to stay, whether we like it or not. Where they have it the people But, gentlemen, as has been said, rural free delivery has come to stay, whether we like it or not. Where they have it the people like it. It has become popular, and they want the service. I am in favor of paying the carriers a good, fair compensation. I believe they are worth $600 a year. But, Mr. Chairman, I was in hopes that the salary of this particular class of officials might soon receive the intelligent consideration of the House, that the matter might come up in the regular way, a bill be reported, open to amendment, open to consideration, and that when we got to amendment, open to consideration, and that when we got through with it it might represent the best judgment of the House.

The difficulty with the proposition of my friend from New York is this: In New York City the class of men that are upon the rolls as carriers are worth a good deal more money in that city than in the smaller cities and towns remote from the metropolis. It costs them more to maintain themselves. The salary of a policeman is higher than in the smaller cities and towns. When I heard the proposition of the gentleman from California it seemed to me that here was a chance to adjust these salaries to the condition of things in every part of the country. In some parts of the country it costs a man a great deal more to carry the mails 23 or 25 miles, on a bad road and in bad weather, than it does in other parts of the country; and bad weather prevails in some localities a great part of the year. For these reasons the service can be performed much more cheaply in some localities than in others.

We have had a system of letting by contract the work of carrying the mails from the trains to the post-offices in different cities and towns. The contract price varies in different localities. The United States ought to pay for this service every dollar that it is worth. If you go into every county and hamlet where we have this free-delivery service and let out the service by public contract to the lowest bidder, you will get no bid below what the service is worth; and if you require that the bidder be a resident upon the route, you will have a service that will be a credit to the Government of the United States, because the man who gets the contract will be anxious to do good service for his neighbors.

It seems to me that in every way in which you can view this proposition it is the best solution of the question. I do hope that a measure proposing proper legislation on this subject will soon be brought into the House. Let it come from the appropriate committee quickly, while we have time to consider these questions that we may get the best indement of the House upon the tions, that we may get the best judgment of the House upon the subject.

Suppose you send this amendment over to the Senate. There there are petitions from these carriers—I have received some myself—that these salaries be fixed at $600 for the first year, $660 for the second year, and $720 for the third year.

The proposition is that they should be paid more for doing the same service the third year than they received for the first. But, sir, if $600 is enough payment for this service in any rural district of the United States for the first year, it is enough for the second or the third. Let us put out this service to the lowest bidder who will take the service and do it properly, and then let us leave it with the Post-Office Department to make these contracts. When we get through with this question, let us put our measure in the shape of a sensible business proposition, so that we can go home and present it to our constituents as a proper law we can go home and present it to our constituents as a proper law for the regulation of this subject.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama addressed the Chair.
The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted and amendments are exhausted. In the absence of objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.
Mr. CANNON L. hope we chall the product of the product

Mr. CANNON. I hope we shall now have a vote. I should like to dispose of this question before the committee rises.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. Hill was agreed to; there being—ayes 109, noes 78. [Applause.]
Mr. PADGETT. I move to amend the section as amended by adding the language which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter the same rights, privileges, and preferences of employment as carriers accorded by the regulations of the Post-Office Department to ex-Federal soldiers under existing laws shall be accorded to honorably discharged ex-Confederate soldiers.

Mr. CANNON. I must make a point of order on this proposition, because it is legislation.

Mr. PADGETT. Will not the gentleman reserve the point of order?

order?
Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order. I realize that the amendment is subject to a point of order. At the same time, however, only a few moments ago we allowed legislation upon this bill to go unchallenged with reference to the land office in Alaska. It is but just and right that this recognition should be given to the old Confederate soldier. Under the existing age limitation of 55 years these old ex-Confederates are excluded from employment in this branch of the Government.

branch of the Government.

A few days ago, when we were discussing the pension appropriation bill eloquent and commendable sentiments were expressed by members on both sides of this Chamber, which found cordial response from gentlemen of all sections. That state of feeling culminated in the offering of a proposition to open the doors of the Soldiers' Homes to ex-Confederate soldiers. But those who were authorized to speak for the ex-Confederate soldiers said they did not want charity.

The proposition which I now offer is not charity. It is simply a proposition to give these men an opportunity to work—to make a living.

bars every ex-Confederate soldier from employment in this service of the Government. I ask this that every ex-Confederate soldier of the Government. I ask this that every ex-Confederate soldier may have an opportunity to perform service for his Government and make a living for himself and family, so that he will not be at any time compelled to ask for charity. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Without regard to the merits of the proposition and without antagonizing it, I must insist on the point of order that it is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Collecting agricultural statistics," for the fiscal year 1901, $2,151.32.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 45, after line 13, insert:
"To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the general expenses of the Division of Publications for the fiscal year 1902, $15,000.
"To supply a deficiency in the appropriations for general expenses of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the fiscal year 1902, $40,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of expenses incurred by the Sergeant-at-Arms on account of attendance of the committee of members of the House of Representatives at the funeral of the late President, William McKinley, $6,250, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 46, after line 25, insert "for miscellaneous items and expenses, ecial and select committees, $30,000."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For star transportation, except the claim No. 20704, $8,845.86.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 60, after line 6, strike out "$8,845.86" and insert in lieu thereof

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, and move that the amendments be adopted and the bill as amended be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Sherman reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9315, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments and with the same back to the House with sundry amendments and with the same parameters has adopted and the bill recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill as amended be passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the previous question is ordered on the bill and the amendments, and the House should then adjourn, would this bill come up to-morrow, Friday morning, for consideration?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.
Mr. CANNON. Then I ask the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.
The previous question was ordered.
Mr. CANNON. I move now that the House adjourn.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Pending the motion to adjourn, the Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanying the Commercial Relations of the United States for the year 1901, being the annual and other reports of consular and diplomatic officers upon the industries and commerce of foreign countries. In view of the importance of these reports to our business interests, I approve the recommendation of the Secretary of State that Congress authorize the printing of an edition of 10,000 copies of the summary entitled "Review of the World's Commerce," and of 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations (including this summary), to be distributed by the Department of State.

Mr. CANNON. The report of the Secretary of War shows these things the gentleman wants to publish, but if the gentleman is willing to bury it deeper in the RECORD I don't object.

[Laughter].
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection. The reports are as follows:

[Report in part of Surgeon-General Sternberg for 1901.]

INSANITY.

Of insanity 273 cases were reported, equivalent to an annual rate of 2.72 per thousand of strength. Of these cases 149, or somewhat more than one-half, were discharged from the service and sent to the Government Hospital for the Insane at Washington, D. C., for treatment. The remaining 124 cases were returned to duty at various periods after having been taken on the sick report. The admission rate in 1899 was 1.78, and the proportion of those sent to the Government Hospital formed 0.87 per thousand of the strength. The increase during the past year is explained by the nervous depression and homesickness among the relatively larger proportion of the strength of the Army serving in the Philippines. Twenty-three cases were reported from the home stations, equivalent to 1.38 per 1,000 men; 14 cases from Cuba, equivalent to a rate of 1.61; 7 cases from the equivalent to 3.69; 99 cases from the Regular troops in the Philippines, equivalent to 2.79, and 123 cases from the Volunteer troops in the Pacific islands, equivalent to a rate of 3.90.

DIARRHEAL DISEASES.

DIARRHEAL DISEASES.

DIARRHEAL DISEASES.

During the year 1897, when all the troops of the United States served at the home stations, the admission rate for diarrheal diseases was 73.77 per thousand of strength, with no death. Dysentery was a comparatively rare disease and seldom fatal. During the decade ended December 31, 1897, the mean annual rate of admissions was 91.06, and the death rate 0.06. In 1888, as a result of war service in Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, the admission rate rose to 388.62, and the increased gravity of the cases was manifested by a death rate of 1.45 per thousand of the strength. During the following year, 1899, the admission rate was 380.69, with a death rate of 2.14. During the past year the admission rate increased to 465.01 and the death rate to 6.47, on account of the relatively large proportion of the Army which was exposed to the causes of diarrheal and dysenteric diseases in the Division of the Philippines.

Among troops serving in the United States the admission rate was only 96.57; in Porto Rico, 148.17, and in Cuba, 166.75, and the death rates in these commands were relatively small. But in the Philippines, among the regulars, the admission rate was 488.25, and among the volunteers, 786.06, while among the troops engaged in the dangerous campaign in China it rose to 1,266.54 per thousand of the strength. The heavy mortality rates occurred in these commands. Among the Pacific islands the death rate was 7.47 per thousand of strength; among the volunteers, 10.88, and among the troops of the China Relief Expedition, 15.92.

The following tabulation shows, in the various commands, the admission rate for acute and chronic dysentery and other diarreal diseases, with the absolute number of cases, of discharges for disability, and of deaths referred to each of these headings. It is evident, however, from the large number of deaths attributed to the second of the selection of the second.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 24, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF H. R. 8739.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 8739) to provide for the appointment of certain officers in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was ordered reprinted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. White for ten days, on account of important business.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Calling up the bill H. R. 9315, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, the Chair asks if a separate vote is demanded upon any amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the item of $500,000 for proper shelter of troops in the Philippines.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks a separate vote, as the Chair understands, on the item of appropriating $500,000 for sheltering troops.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to offer a motion to recommit the bill with some instructions. Would that motion be in order before the vote is taken upon the amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion would not be in order with after the contract the state of the in order until after the engrossment and third reading of the bill. The gentleman from Illinois demands a separate vote on the $500,000 item just referred to by the Chair. There being no other demand for a separate vote, the other amendments will be submitted to the House in gross. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 4, page 17, the following:
"For the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the "Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $500,000."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CANNON. On that amendment I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays upon this amendment.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

A parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Would it be in order for me to move as an amendment to this proposition that the President shall submit to Congress a detailed report showing how this appropriation of $500,000 is expended?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that the previous question has been ordered on the bill and amendments, so that it would not be in order. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays upon this amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I thought I was paired, Mr. Speaker, and I understand my pair, Mr. Morrell, has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not enter into the consideration of pairs. The gentleman has lost his opportunity to vote.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded as voting "no." I wish to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the gentleman is not recorded at all. Did the gentleman vote?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I voted "no" under a misapprochemsion.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. McDermott's name, and he voted "aye."

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if Mr. Morrell has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that Mr. Morrell did vote.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Speaker, I claim the right to vote. I ask unanimous consent to cast my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not permitted to submit that Mr. SOUTHWICK. I want to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening for his name when it should have been called?

Mr. SOUTHWICK. I was.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SOUTHWICK, and he voted "no," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then approunced as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed. On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the transaction of business on the Private Calendar, under the rule which makes this day the day for considering pension business.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, with Mr. Capron in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will read the first bill.

MARY F. HOOPER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6459) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Hooper.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary F. Hooper, widow of Quincy A. Hooper, late acting volunteer lieutenant, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, as this is the first day in the session of the Fifty-seventh Congress for the consideration of special acts, I desire to call the attention of the House and country again to the fact of this custom. I have looked over the Calendar and I find about 80 bills—I have not counted them very closely—about two-thirds of which are for the increase of pensions. While I have not examined very closely, a large majority of these have appealed time and again to the Pension Bureau and have failed to appealed time and again to the Pension Bureau and have failed to get this increase and this pension from that Bureau. This House is made in practice a court of appeals for those who are unable to get anything at the Bureau. They first go to the board of appeals in the Bureau; but as usual they now come to Congress as a court of appeals to get what they are not justly entitled to.

I submit again that this custom is wrong. I submit again that the pension laws of the United States are sufficiently liberal so that under their provisions there need be no trouble whatever in getting consideration and approval for a meritorious case. There getting consideration and approval for a meritorious case. has been a reduction of the number of witnesses required; safeguard after safeguard has been removed until the door is wide open at the Pension Bureau, so that there is no reason why any deserving soldier, or widow, or child can not go there and enter. It is an open and shut game and all righteous claims are granted generally

I have here a long editorial from the Boston Herald, a Republican paper. While I do not wish all of this article read, I desire the Clerk to read the concluding portion of the editorial, which is short and will take but a little time. It is plain and simple, and no partisan spirit in it.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I object to that article being read as coming from a Republican paper. The paper that the gentleman names has never gone further than mugwumpery.

Mr. TALBERT. It does not make any difference what you

"A rose by any other name will smell just as sweet." If it is a mugwump paper, then it is worse than a Republican paper, for-

He who dallies is a dastard, And he who doubts is damned.

I believe in a man being on one side or the other of any ques-on. Anyway, this paper is a Republican paper, supporting the Administration excess on pensions.

I ask the Clerk to read. The Clerk read as follows:

One point which Congressman TALBERT made was that Congress should at least stop passing private pension legislation. He claimed that from 1861 to 1901 there had been no less than 8,128 of these private pension bills passed in a most reckless manner and that Cleveland and Grant were the only two Presidents who used their veto power on this matter. Whatever may be said of the pension question, we think everyone will agree with Congressman TALBERT that the private pension bill business should be stopped by Congress. That body has not the time to investigate cases as has the Pension Department, and, for that matter, little attempt at investigation is made on most of the bills. They are generally logrolled through on the basis of you vote for a pension for my constituent and I will vote for yours. Both the Pension Committee of the House and of the Senate have promised a reform in this matter, and to judge from the enormous number of private pension bills that have already been introduced into Congress they will have a good chance to begin their pruning down during the present session.

Mr. TALBERT. I see that this magnificent paper, whatever you call it, goes even further than I did. I said that this question of granting pensions by special act, by private legislation, ought to be abolished, except in some extreme cases. This paper says that it ought to be dropped absolutely and entirely. I submit that there are some extreme cases where, on account of technicalities, or certain environments, conditions, or circumstances, applicants have been unjustly denied pensions at the Bureau-not unjustly either, but denied on construction of law. I do not object, nor will any reasonable man object, to the passage of special acts to remedy the injustice in such cases. I will not and have not

Mr. KLEBERG. Does not the gentleman think that the Committee on Invalid Pensions are exercising discretion and good judgment in reporting favorably all these meritorious bills, and is not the Committee of the Whole House doing the same thing?

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman asks me whether I do not think the Committee on Invalid Pensions are exercising precaution enough in these cases. It may be that they are; but if so, it is the first time in my ten years' service here that I have ever known them to do it. As a matter of course the committee is careful; but it is practically an impossibility for the committee to go over the thousands of bills presented to them here. Nine times out of ten the committee knows nothing about the case. Only one man has such knowledge—the man who looks over the case and re-ports the bill—at the instance of some member on this side of the House or the other. One side is just as much to blame as the other.

The practice that exists here is wrong. During my service here about 8,000 or more of these bills have been passed. I say again, if this House still insists on passing pension bills in this way, many of them increasing pensions to those who are already pensioned, then I hope it will grant one little request which I want to make; that is, that we stop presenting claims here for the removal of charges of desertion against men who have been untrue to their flag. Such men do not deserve consideration. As I said here some time ago, from the time that Lincoln issued his am-nesty proclamation in favor of deserters there has been ample opportunity for these men to come in and have the charge of desertion removed where it had not been justly entered against them. But it does seem to me that at this late day there can not be any deserving cases of this kind. There ought to be a limit a point beyond which we should not go.

Mr. BOREING. Does not the gentleman believe that where a soldier has been wrongfully reported as a deserter his military record ought to be corrected?

Mr. TALBERT. Of course I do, as does any other man of common sense; but does the gentleman think that where a soldier deserted his colors, joined another regiment, obtained bounty, then jumped the bounty time and again, and time and again showed himself to be a mere "coffee cooler," he ought to be allowed to come in here fooling his Congressmen into having the charge of desertion removed and then getting a pension on the strength of that? It is such men that I am denouncing, not the deserving

Mr. BOREING. I do not believe that such men are entitled to any consideration at our hands; but where for any good reason a man has left the regiment of his first enlistment, joined another, a man has left the regiment of his first enlistment, joined another, and then faithfully served out his term and obtained an honorable discharge, I believe he is entitled to a pension.

Mr. TALBERT. Why is it, I will ask my friend, that in all the years that have elapsed, during which bill after bill has been passed extending the time in which applications could be properly made, these men have not come in and availed themselves of their

Mr. BOREING. Perhaps the gentleman does not know that many of these men are poor and illiterate, and have had no knowledge of the acts of Congress which have been passed from time to time in their favor.

Mr. TALBERT. But, Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that there ought to be some limit to legislation of this character, and that the criticism which I make upon it is eminently fair and just and proper. The Congressmen who present these bills ought to be posted.

Mr. GIBSON. I will state to the gentleman from South Carolina, if he will allow an interruption—

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly. I always yield to my friend with

Mr. GIBSON. I will tell the gentleman that there is not a single, solitary case on the Calendar for the removal of the charge of desertion.

Mr. TALBERT. I see that there is not. I agree with the gentleman in that regard. But how many do you think will come in if you begin to grind them out when the mill is in operation?

Mr. GIBSON. There is not a case of that kind on the Calendar at the present time.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I again submit to the House that if it is the intention to continue this practice which we have seen practiced so long in the House, and against which I have made a determined opposition; if the heads of gentlemen are set in this direction and they are still joined to their idols, and if they are going to use the votes of the old soldiers to electioneer with, as in the past, I submit that we should have the fullest discussion; we should have all the testimony in the cases presented for our consideration; that each one of these bills should have the careful scrutiny in the House, so as to enable members to intelligently act upon it without reference to what may have been the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Of course conthe action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Of course, gentlemen will recognize the fact that in all cases of bills coming from the committees we scrutinize them, debate them, and pas upon them without regard, as a rule, to what may have been the report of the committee.

But in this case the custom has been in the past to just have the title of the bill read—the report is rarely read—and then pass the bill on through the House at such speed which is sufficient to make the head of the distinguished chairman of that committee swim, tall as he is. I claim we ought to know what we are doing, what character of legislation we are adopting, and that the reports in all of these grees should be presented to the House for ports in all of these cases should be presented to the House for consideration.

Mr. BOREING. I say that the gentleman from South Carolina is exactly right in that regard.

Mr. TALBERT. Thank you. There is one sinner saved at last, I hope. [Laughter.] I hope others will come along and join the gentleman seeking salvation [laughter] and showing a disposition to do right in this matter.

Mr. BOREING. No; not one sinner saved, but one solitary instance in which the gentleman from South Carolina himself is right on this question. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from Kentucky has shown himself to be sound in this one instance. And I can only say in connection with his conversion that as long as the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return. [Laughter and ap-

Mr. BOREING. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina, then, will take advantage of the opportunity to come in himself.

[Renewed laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I am perfectly willing to join the gentleman in all that is right in regard to pensions and bills of this character, but we do not want bounty jumpers and coffee coolers and men of that kind put upon the rolls. [Laughter.] Mr. BOREING. And Kentucky does not want them any more than South Carolina does.

Mr. TALBERT. Oh, well, of course I take the gentleman's ord. I know that they have the best liquor in the world in Kentucky, the fastest horses and fairest women that are in the world, except in South Carolina.

Mr. BOREING. And the best soldiers.
Mr. TALBERT. I am willing to concede that, too, except in South Carolina. Kentucky should be proud of her soldiers. She has shown that she was proud of them. She brought her gallant dead home from the Mexican battlefields and erected a magnificent monument to their memory, which was done by the ladies of that great State. The legislature of the State of Kentucky, on top of that monument, erected a statue of a woman-a most appropriate emblem of the work done by the noble women of that State. Grand old Kentucky! I hope she will stand by me and help me keep out these intruders who have no right and no claim upon our bounty.

Mr. BOREING. I will join the gentleman in everything that I believe to be right in that regard, and I will never go back on a true soldier.

Mr. TALBERT. Nor never will I. It can not be said that on the floor of this House I have ever undertaken in any case to defeat just claims. I do not rise for any such purpose. I have tried to be liberal, more than liberal, in the cases of these old soldiers. But gentlemen seem never content with the legislation so liberal which has been adopted by this Government in regard to these people. Where is this thing to end? How can we stop it?

The position of gentlemen here reminds me of the old story of the eleven men on the jury, the twelfth man claiming that it was the most contrary set of men he had ever met in the world. Now, we have pretty much the same condition of affairs here. I find a great many contrary men. I see my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Gibson] is smiling.

Mr. Gibson. Yes. I was thinking of the illustration of the The gentleman reminds me of the eleven contrary gentleman.

men on that jury. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. Well, this is a similar matter, and I only wish to do my duty on the floor of the House to the soldiers and also to the people of this country. They certainly demand some consideration. This is a small matter, it is true, but like all small matters if the leak is not stopped it will go on and on until the cask is empty, Now I ask simply—and I am sure that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions himself would not object to that, because it is a reasonable request—I ask simply that the reports be read in these cases to show the basis upon which the bills stand and to indicate to us, as custodians of the money of the people, how this money is to be spent, why it is to be spent, and what justification there is for the spending of it. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. TALBERT. Why, certainly. I thought there were some sinners over here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not desire to have the gentleman yield to me. I desire to be recognized in my own right after the gentleman from South Carolina has concluded. I desire to send to the Clerk's desk to have read the rules of the Pension Committee of the House of Representatives, which are practically the rules governing the committees having in charge the pensions of all wars. I wish these rules printed in connection with what has already been stated, because I know the gentleman intends to be fair to the committees of the House and Senate.

In order to save time I will ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I hope that request will be granted.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the paper which he send to the desk be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The paper is as follows:

RULES-COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 17, 1901.

1. To secure the consideration of a hill for pension, or increase of pension, a carefully prepared petition should be addressed "To the Congress of the United States," setting forth the applicant's post-office address, his age, and the proper designation of the military organization to which he belonged, or the names of all naval vessels on which he served, and the length of his service; whether application for pension has been made to the Bureau of Pensions, and if so the action taken thereon; and if no such application has been made, the reasons therefor; the nature and degree of all disabilities, whether mental or physical, showing specifically those claimed to have been contracted in the service and in the line of duty, and stating allerities had been due to vicious habits, and the extent to which they disable him for the performance of manual labor; the character and value of all property owned by him, and net annual income from all sources. The facts enumerated in said petition should be supported by claimant's sworn statement, and the petition and affidavit should be transmitted in a single envelope to one of the members representing the State in which the applicant resides.

2. No bill will be considered by this committee unless application for pension or increase of pension has first been made to the Bureau of Pensions, nor while the claim is pending in the Bureau, except in cases where conclusive proof is presented that the claimant has no pensionable status under existing laws.

proof is presented that the claimant has no pensionable status under existing laws.

3. Where original pension or increase of pension has been allowed by special act, no proposition for additional pension will be entertained. In no case will the allowance of arrears be recommended, or application for increase of pension favorably considered, if claimant is regularly employed by and in receipt of a salary from the Government of the United States.

4. Bills proposing to pension sons or daughters of soldiers will not be entertained except in cases where it is shown by satisfactory evidence that the proposed beneficiary has been idiotic, deformed, or otherwise permanently helpless from a period antedating the age of 16 years, and then only in case of destitution. In such cases the rate allowed shall not exceed $12 per month.

5. Where pension has been allowed at the rate of $3 per month under the law of 1887, granting service pension to soldiers and widows of soldiers of the Mexican war, no proposition for increase will be entertained until after application has been made to the Pension Bureau and action taken thereon under the amended Mexican pension law, granting $12 per month to such as are wholly disabled for manual labor and in destitute circumstances.

6. Bills proposing to pension men who were not mustered into the military service, except in cases where in emergencies they performed military duty and were wounded, or unless some special or extraordinary service was rendered in connection with the Army, are not admissible.

7. The rating for pension or increase of pension to widows of officers will be graded according to rank, as indicated in the following statement:

For major general and brigadier-general in the Army, and commodore and rear-admiral in the Navy, not exceeding $50 per month.

For colonel and lieutenant-colonel in the Army and Marine Corps, and captain, commander, and those officers of the Navy, such as surgeon, paymaster, chief engineer, ranking with commander by law, lieutenant commanding, month.

For major in the military service and Marine Corps, and lieutenant and such other surgeons, paymasters, and chief engineers who rank with lieutenant by law in the naval service, and passed assistant surgeons in the naval service, not exceeding $35 per month.

For captain in the Army and Marine Corps, chaplain in the Army, and provost-marshal, professor of mathematics, master, and assistant surgeon, assistant paymaster, and chaplain in the naval service, not exceeding $30 per month.

month.

For first and second lieutenants in the Army and Marine Corps, acting assistant or contract surgeon, and deputy provost marshal, first assistant engineer, ensign, and pilot in the naval service, and enrolling officer, not exceeding $25 per month.

No allowance of pension to widows will be recommended above the general law rating, except in case of destitution or extreme physical disability, to be substantiated by competent testimony, and no original pension will be recommended in excess of the rating provided by the general law for a similar rank.

eral law rating, except in case of destitution or extreme physical disability, to be substantiated by competent testimony, and no original pension will be recommended in excess of the rating provided by the general law for a similar rank.

8. Consideration will not be given to any bill to restore to the pension roll the name of a widow whose pension was forfeited by remarriage. In order to afford relief to this class of widows, Congress passed an act, which was approved March 3, 1901, amending section 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read as follows:

"The remarriage of any widow, dependent mother, or dependent sister entitled to pension shall not bar her right to such pension to the date of her remarriage, whether an application therefor was filed before or after such marriage; but on the remarriage of any widow, dependent mother, or dependent sister having a pension, such pension shall cease: Provided, however, That any widow who was the lawful wife of any officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, during the period of his service in any war, and whose name was placed or shall hereafter be placed on the pension roll because of her husband's death as the result of wound or injury received or disease contracted in such military or naval service, and whose name has been or shall hereafter be dropped from said pension roll by reason of her marriage to another person who has since died or shall hereafter die, or from whom she has been heretofore or shall be hereafter divorced, upon her own application and without fault on her part, and if she is without means of support other than her daily labor as defined by the acts of July 14, 1862, March 3, 1873, and March 19, 1886, such pension to commence from the date of the filing of her application in the Pension Bureau after the approval of this act: And provided further, That where the pension of said widow on her second or subsequent marriage has accrued to a helpless or idiotic child, or a child or child

9. Bills proposing to pension brothers or sisters of soldiers are not admissible.

10. Bills for original pension exceeding in rate the general-law provisions for same disabilities or rank will not be favorably considered. Ordinarily bills for original pension will be considered in preference to those for in-

11. All bills will be promptly referred to a subcommittee, but shall not be reported to or taken up for action by the full committee until all necessary papers, including the Pension Office files, have been received and the same have been considered by the subcommittee, and his report has been submitted in writing.

12. Where dependency is required to be shown it must be by affidavit of disinterested persons, except that when members introducing such bills have personal knowledge of the facts, their written statements may be accepted.

13. No Pension Office files shall be taken from the committee room except upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, nor shall any papers filed with the committee be removed therefrom except upon receipt from the proper officers or the member filing the same.

14. These rules shall not be set aside or amended, nor shall any bill once laid on the table be taken up for reconsideration except by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the full committee.

Mr. TALBERT. In regard to these rules, I know they have very good rules, but they do not observe them. It reminds me of the story about Oliver Cromwell, when he besieged a certain Catholic town. The Catholics came out and offered to surrender if he would respect their religion. He said, "Certainly, I will respect your religion, but the very first man who is caught attending mass will be hanged." [Laughter.] Now, I have no doubt the intentions of the committee are good. Nearly everybody has good intentions. Hell is paved with good intentions; but gentlemen override these rules. They are set aside here, and a rule of sentiment obtains which works upon the sympathy of the House, and their bills are ground out without any consideration

Mr. BROMWELL. I want to say to the gentleman that as far as the Committee on Pensions is concerned, I deny that there is any violation of the rules adopted by that committee in any case whatever. We adhere strictly to these rules, and I think the gentleman will have very great difficulty in finding any case reported from the Pensions Committee that does not come within the rules that they have adopted unanimously, and each member of that committee individually has agreed to stand by those rules.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I am astonished at what the gentleman says. The members of the committee may all have joined the church since the last session, but I did not know it. [Laughter.]

However, I will say I do not wish to do injustice to any gentleman on any pension committee.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is entirely proper that if any gentleman wants to know the facts in a case, the facts should be given. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Tal-BERT] wants to know what the facts are in this case. I consider that a reasonable request, and when a reasonable request is made I consider it the duty of some member of the committee to respond to it; but I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina spond to it; but I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that if we read all these reports it will consume so much time that it will practically block business. We do not call for the reading of reports in any other cases. The House just passed a bill appropriating $16,000,000. Nobody called for the reading of the report on that bill. Members are expected to get these reports and read them at their leisure. But, Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman from South Carolina and the information of the House I will state the facts in this case.

mation of the House, I will state the facts in this case.

This woman, Mary L. Hooper, is the widow of a lieutenant in the Navy. That lieutenant lost his life as the result of Army This woman, Mary L. Hooper, is the widow of a neutenant in the Navy. That lieutenant lost his life as the result of Army service. The committee find that to be the fact. His widow spent her married life waiting upon him. He was utterly helpless during the whole of his life after he received the injury. He died as a result of the injury. This woman is to-day paralyzed, absolutely helpless, not able to attend to her own physical wants, and if the Pension Bureau had found the facts as we find them—that this soldier died from disease contracted in the service—she would get the very same pension that we allow her by this bill.

We only allow her the amount that the general law would have allowed her if the Pension Office had found that her husband had died as the result of injuries received in the service.

The difference between the Invalid Pensions Committee and the Pension Bureau is that we are of opinion that this soldier died from injuries inflicted upon him in the line of duty in the service of his country; whereas the Pension Bureau were of a different opinion. The Pension Bureau gave her the pitiful sum different opinion. The Pension Bureau gave her the pitiful sum of $8. This paralyzed woman, who spent her life in waiting upon her wounded and injured husband, who was wounded in his career as an officer, is now receiving $8 a month. The Invalid Pensions Committee say that under the proof in the case her husband died of injuries received in the service. If that be so, then the law gives her $30; and the committee give to this paralyzed, injuries received in the service. digent woman, who spent her life nursing a husband wounded in the service of his country, the very same pension that the general law would give her if the Pension Bureau had found the facts as we find them.

Mr. TALBERT. She then made application to the Pension Bureau and was refused this increase? Mr. GIBSON. The Pension Bureau, as I have stated on this floor again and again, require a pension case to be made out by proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

I hold, Mr. Chairman, that the judgment of 15 men, members of this House, Republicans and Democrats, who have paid strict attention to this business, is as good as the judgment of two special examiners in the Pension Bureau or of the medical director of the Pension Bureau. I hold that a unanimous verdict of the Invalid Pensions Committee, made up of Republicans and Democrats, is worth more than the verdict of two or three men in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. TALBERT. Is not the Pension Bureau properly charged with the conduct of this business? Is it not their special business?

Mr. GIBSON. That is true.

Mr. TALBERT. Are we not willing to let this Bureau conduct this business without this unwarranted interference by this great and grand committee to which the gentleman has paid so eloquent a tribute? Mr. GIBSON. The Committee on Invalid Pensions and this Mr. GIBSON. The Committee on Invalid Pensions and this House are both strictly warranted in reaching the conclusions they have. It is within our jurisdiction. I wish to say further, Mr. Chairman, that in the last session of Congress there were a little over 700 private pension bills passed, creating an expenditure of $10,016 a month. That was all that was granted by the special pension bills of the last session of last Congress; and no $10,016 a month paid out of the Treasury of the United States carry so much of blessedness as the $10,016 we appropriated in the pension cases in the last session of Congress.

Mr. TALBERT. Does not the gentleman recognize the principle that I am arguing? The great Revolutionary war was fought, if you recollect, upon a principle, and not upon the tax on

Mr. GIBSON. We are not here discussing principles; we are here discussing the facts.

Mr. TALBERT. Does the gentleman not know we are discarding principle and the Constitution in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question if he will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield? Mr. GIBSON. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. 1es.

Mr. BARTLETT. I see this is a bill to increase a pension already drawn by the soldier. This bill increases his pension,

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. It is a widow's pension.

Mr. GIBSON. I did not hear any question from the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is a bill granting an increase of pension. Mr. GIBSON. I did not hear any question from the gentleman.
Mr. BARTLETT. This is a bill granting an increase of pension already drawn?
Mr. GIBSON. It raises the pension from $8 to $30 a month;
just what the widow would get under the general law.
Mr. BARTLETT. What reason did the Department give for

Mr. BARTLETT. What reason did the Department give for not granting the pension?

Mr. GIBSON. They hold that the soldier did not die from an injury he received in the service. The surgeon that waited on the soldier testified that he did.

Mr. BARTLETT. And this bill is to obviate the decision made by the Pension Department, that this woman was not entitled to a pension because of the fact that her husband did not die of discrete and received in the Armet.

a pension because of the fact that her husband did not die of disease or a wound he received in the Army.

Mr. GIBSON. That is it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me. The Pension Bureau did not hold that he did not die of injuries received in the Army, but held that the proof was short. They did not make an affirmative finding that he did not; simply held that the proof does not establish the fact. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman and the House to the testimony in this particular case, that they may determine the testimony in this particular case, that they may determine the kind of scrutiny the committee is giving to this class of bills. Here is the testimony of the physician:

That he is a practicing physician and has been acquainted with Quincy A. Hooper for about twelve years; that he saw him a few hours after he was stricken with cerebral hemorrhage; that from the history of the case obtained by years of acquaintance with said Hooper, and from his family, after the hemorrhage had begun, it was a difficult matter to determine or to state positively the cause of said hemorrhage.

That is the trouble. It was a difficult matter to determine. Now, let me give you a little more information:

The officer had suffered ever since 1862 from an injury to his left leg incurred in the line of duty and for which he was pensioned. For several years last past he had been totally disabled from labor or business on that account, and for long periods of time he could not use the leg at all. He had fallen many times on account of weakness of said leg.

The surgeon, you notice, says he had fallen many times on account of weakness of said leg.

On the day this cerebral hemorrhage first occurred he had a fall, but it is impossible to state positively whether the hemorrhage caused the fall or whether he fell, as he had often done before, from the weakness of the injured leg, and this caused the cerebral hemorrhage.

The Department requires positive proof. Here is further proof:

Had this hemorrhage never occurred. Mr. Hooper would have died from the effects of the injury to his left leg within a year or two at the outside, as the sciatic nerve was injured and rheumatism and heart disease had re-

His widow, Mrs. Hooper, is suffering from debility by reason of paralysis. She can not use one side, and can barely move a little. Here is an old soldier's widow. Had she presented her case to the gentleman from South Carolina, had she presented it to a jury of 12 men in any civil court in the United States, it would have held that her husband died by reason of the injury received in the service. The Commissioner of Pensions says, "We received in the service. The Commissioner of Pensions says, can not positively say that he did."

The committee concludes that the preponderance of testimony is that he did so die. And now, when the widow, who stood by him during the time of his entire service and nursed in sickness until death, and she without means and an object of charity, with one side paralyzed, and unable to move one side at all, we are not to be criticised when we say that the great American Republic is willing to increase that woman's pension from $8 to $30 a month, that being the amount she is entitled to under the law, and would have been receiving it for many years but for the ruling of the Department that she must prove positively that her husband died of disease incurred. The preponderance is that he did so die of disease incurred, and the people expect Congress to take care of just such people as she.

I am willing to agree with the gentleman that if there is any coffee cooler, if there is anybody that is favorably reported that has not made out a case, if he will point it out I will stand by him and vote with him. This committee is ready to back every report it has made, and when we show as clear a case as we do in this one, I believe the action of this House ought not only to be in the one, I believe the action of this House ought not only to be in the line of the committee, but it ought to promptly pass this bill at $30 without further delay.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt as to the truth of what the gentleman says, but I know a number of widows of the survivors of the Indian and Mexican wars that are living only upon $8 a month, and that all over this country of ours. hear of nobody coming in here and offering to raise their pensions from $8 to $25 and $30 a month.

Mr. BOREING. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes.

Mr. BOREING. I will state for the information of the gentleman from South Carolina that the Committee on Pensions are constantly increasing the pensions of that class of claimants.

Mr. TALBERT. Only to $12 a month. I can not recollect of a single instance in this House where they have been increased to over $12 a month.

There are several cases in which they have

Mr. BOREING. There are been increased to $12 and more

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if the law allows the widow $30 providing her husband died by reason of injuries received while in the line of duty, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if, when he is convinced that the man did so die, is he not willing to give the widow what the law says she shall have?

I am willing to submit this case on that proposition, and defy the gentleman from South Carolina, or anyone else, to dispute this case or any other one we present. We invite criticism and investigation of the merits of every claim reported favorably.

Mr. TALBERT. I say this: That there is a difference of opinion between the Bureau and this committee, and as this committee does not say that it is positively sure that he did die from injuries received in the line of duty, that his death was of service origin, I think a reasonable compromise in this case ought to be had. I therefore move to strike out the word "thirty" and insert 'twenty-five," as a compromise, and I hope the House will vote to do it.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that motion will not prevail. It is almost absolutely certain that this soldier, with a service of four years and five months, died as the result of wounds. There is no question about it in my mind whatever. This good woman married him in 1856. She was his wife during the war and she cared for him after he was wounded, and to-day she is paralyzed, helpless, and totally dependent upon others, and is an object of charity. The law gives her $30 a month because of his rank, and it ought to have been allowed at the Pension Office. There is no question about it, but it was not, and we are here to correct it, and I hope the committee will give her $30 or nothing.

[Applause.]
The question was taken on the amendment; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were 1 aye and 78 noes.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Is the gentleman from South Carolina here to obstruct legislation?

Mr. TALBERT. I think my proposition was a reasonable one and ought to be adhered to, and I am willing to obstruct legislation to that extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

[After counting.] One hundred and thirty-six members present; a quorum of the committee being present, the noes have it, and the amendment is lost

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES D. WOODWARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4268) granting an increase of pension of James D. Woodward. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James D. Woodward, late of Company I, First Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment was recommended by the committee: In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word 'thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ANDREW H. GIFFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5162) granting an increase of pension to Andrew H. Gifford. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew H. Gifford, late of Company H. Eighty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee: In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID CUPPS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4182) granting a pension to David Cupps. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David Cupps, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the committee. were agreed to:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word

"twenty."
In same line insert after the word "month" the following: "in lieu of that he is now receiving."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to David Cupps."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CYRUS ODELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1285) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Odell. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cyrus Odell, late of Company E, Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment was recommended by the committee: In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to hear the report read in this

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. Norton rose.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I hope no gentleman will object to the reading of the report. I think it ought to be read for the information especially of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Talbert] in order to show what has been the action of the committee in this case and what it is going to be from start to finish.

Mr. TALBERT. That is right.

Mr. NORTON. I desire only to make a statement. I introduced this bill, having personal knowledge of this soldier and the circumstances of the case. After the bill had been thoroughly examined by the committee they themselves increased the amount from $25, the sum named in the bill, to $30, on account of the merits of the case. I hope now the report will be read.

Mr. GIBSON. Allow me to ask whether this man was, in the language of the gentleman from South Carolina, a "bounty jumper" or "coffee cooler?"

Mr. NORTON. Let the report be read, and members will see the record of this man.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report:

[House Report No. 47, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1225) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Odell, submit the following report:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of this soldier from $17 to $30 per

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 128) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Odell, submit the following "This bill proposes to increase the pension of this soldier from $17 to $90 per month."

This bill proposes to increase the pension of this soldier from $17 to $90 per month.

The records of the War Department show that Cyrus Odell, the soldier maned in this bill, and now 80 years of age, served as a corporal in Company $180 years of the committee of

Mr. TALBERT (before the reading of the report was concluded). I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

There was no objection.
The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

URIAH S. KARMANY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2607) granting an increase of pension to Uriah S. Karmany.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Uriah S. Karmany, late of Company H, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out, in line 8, the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

LEVI CROSS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7408) granting an increase of pension to Levi Cross, of Manchester, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Levi Cross, of Manchester, Iowa, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Forty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "of Manchester, Iowa."
In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "and Company D, Forty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry."
In line 9 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

end the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to

Levi Cross

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of opposing these pensions; but I notice that this bill and a number of others that have preceded it, as well as a great number ber of others that have preceded it, as well as a great number that are to follow, propose to increase the pension of a soldier who is already receiving pension under the law. It is proposed to increase these pensions by these special acts of Congress. Now, there has been on the statute book for years a law providing for an increase of pensions by the Pension Office, on proper application and proof. In many of these cases—for instance, the case just now of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Norton]—it must strike the minds of members as the circumstances are disclosed, that under the rules of law as now defined stances are disclosed, that under the rules of law as now defined stances are disclosed, that under the rules of law as now defined in the statutes these increases of pensions might be granted by the Pension Bureau; that the soldier is not to be under the necessity of coming and asking Congress for the increase, and then waiting until his particular bill shall go through the tedious process necessary in dealing with special cases.

Now here is a bill, introduced originally, as I understand, by the Speaker of this House. The bill as introduced proposes an increase of the pension from $17 to $50 a month, and the committee has reported in favor of a pension of $30 a month. I should like to know why it is that in this and other cases the application for increase, if meritorious, could not be granted at the Pension Office, instead of requiring some member of Congress to introduce a special bill?

cial bill?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If the gentleman will allow me, I can state this matter in a word. Mr. BARTLETT. I shall be very glad to hear the gentleman's

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. In my judgment, and, I think, in the judgment of the committee—in fact, I believe it is the almost universal judgment of the country—the Pension Office has adopted requirements as to evidence which can not be complied with by men who have to seek for evidence going back to the period of the war. They require that it shall be proven—how, Mr. Chairman? I ask anyone to examine the rules and see what proof is man? I ask anyone to examine the rules and see what proof is required to be made in such cases. It is required to be proved beyond all possibility of doubt. It is almost impossible proof to make. It has got to be proven by two comrades of the soldier or by an officer of a certain rank.

Now when it appears to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in many instances probable, and in most instances more than probable, that the claim is a correct one, but where the man has not been able to furnish the absolute proof required by the Dorost able, that the claim is a correct one, but where the man has not been able to furnish the absolute proof required by the Department, the committee has acted favorably upon the bill. I do not think that the Pension Department should require proof that would not be required of any plaintiff in any question before any of the courts of this country to establish his claim, and we have adopted that rule, as has been already suggested. The committee, where it is convinced that there is a proper claim, where the man has served long and faithfully, where there is a diseased old soldier who is unable to care for himself and to support himself, we say we will not require you to make in support of your claim we say we will not require you to make in support of your claim the proof that would not be required from any other citizen in any case in any other court in the country. It is only a fair solu-tion of the question to say what is the fact and act sensibly on the fact as established.

The reason that he does not receive his pension from the office is because of the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions has required this proof to be positive, as I have suggested; and I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in this connection, without criticising the present Commissioner, Mr. Evans, or criticising the administration of his Department in any respect, it is the rule established in the office, and I do not believe that this House desires to adopt I believe that this body desires to do what is just, reasonable, and fair to these men, and not to require them to do something that is beyond the power of man to do.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to interrupt the gentleman—
Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman this question, if he knows of any other tribunal that passes upon questions of fact, judicial or quasi judicial, that requires any such proof to establish the facts as are required in these cases of granting a pension or increasing a pension?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I do not, Mr. Chairman, I will say in response to the gentleman from Georgia, and if the House wants to establish a different rule, then I think I entirely misapprehend the feeling of the House in this regard. I do not think that such a rule should be established, and I do not believe that the House should consent to its enactment. This House does not want to loot the Treasury, but it does want fair play to the men who made it possible for this great Republic to live and to-day present a united Republic, as the founders intended. I am tired of this harping, and demand more action and less pretensions. This narping, and demand more action and less pretensions. This claim is meritorious, as every gentleman present must know.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that this controversy has arisen. It is not unusual, however, in the consideration of these pension bills. We have it every day when pension matters are considered. Something occurs to disturb the peace of the House and to call forth reflections with reference to the action of Congress or of the Department in this matter. the action of Congress or of the Department in this matter. We have heard it here over and over again; and I had presumed that there was not a member on either side of this House who was not thoroughly familiar with the laws which have been made in pension matters.

The law to which reference is made, and which is now being enforced, was established over a third of a century ago. That required that every pensioner, or applicant for a pension, should prove, beyond reasonable doubt, by the testimony of two of his comrades, or by a commissioned officer, when, where, and under what circumstances he acquired the disease for which he seeks to be pensioned, and it requires to-day either that evidence of the two comrades or the evidence of a commissioned officer. An officer, a captain or a lieutenant is, under that law, as far as his testimony is concerned, equal to two privates, that is to say, his word will go where the testimony of two privates is required. And, as to the evidence required, when and where did you acquire hemorrhoids or heart disease? When and where did you contract any certain disease? That, Mr. Chairman, could not be proven if every man in the entire command had been a physician and a surgeon. And yet that is required to-day under this old law.

Now, I beg to say to you that there is obviously some intent in the continuance of this law. There is a purpose in the enactment and enforcement of these rules. It could not be maintained if there were no object back of it all. It is established against the old soldier intentionally. I have myself considered this matter with real parts of the search of the surface of the old soldier intentionally. I have myself considered this matter with you heretofore. I have spoken upon the subject at length. We have tried over and over again to modify the rules which have been established, and make it possible to secure proof in

Now, the Commissioner says you must prove your claim by the testimony of two comrades—although the men may be dead—or else you can prove it by the testimony of one commissioned officer, and he too may be dead. If you can not do this, if you can not make proof satisfactory to the office, the doubt is resolved against you.

No matter the length of your service, no matter what may be your status under the general law, no matter how wounded or diseased, no matter how much proof you pile up, no matter what statements are made by the board of examining surgeons, it avails you nothing in the face of a rule established by the Departavails you nothing in the face of a rule established by the Department, or a secret order issued by some one high in authority, to occasion delay, and keep a case hanging and dragging along for years, and a delay wholly unnecessary. It is not to make the pension roll a roll of honor. It is not to shut off "pension sharks." Do you know, many an old veteran has told me that the greatest "shark" he knew of was somewhere in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. Chairman the old soldiers can not do otherwise than come

Mr. Chairman, the old soldiers can not do otherwise than come to Congress for relief, if they hope for a pension while they are alive, because the Pension Bureau does not give them the prompt settlement they should have. Day by day I receive pitiful appeals from the veterans in my district. One to-day says: "Can not you get the Commissioner to let me know if he is to do anything for me or not? My case has been pending for years. I am not able to do work, and I do not want to go to the poorhouse to spend my last days. My wife and I are wondering what will become of us." last days. Now, let me say that to me it appears that the Republican party leaders are striving hard to run the Pension Bureau as an adjunct to the Republican party. Why, sir, let me give you an illustration showing why it appears that way. I have here in my hand a pink slip of paper, which you will all recognize as being for the use of Congressmen in calling for information from the Pension Department. We read at the bottom:

These slips are exclusively for the use of Representatives in Congress, and when used by any other person will not receive consideration.

Now, here is one of these blanks asking for information relating to the case of a soldier in my own town and signed by a politician who had his home in New York City during the last campaign. Now, this status call was dated June 1, and here is a reply sent to this Republican politician, not a member of Congress, dated June 4, giving a full statement of the case. I call myself last a reply to a status call in thirty days and have in the case. lucky if I get a reply to a status call in thirty days; and here is a letter from this politician which says, "You can see what the Republican party is doing for you," sent along with the reply of the Department; and I have more than a score of such letters sent into my home city on stationery bearing the letter heads of the Republican national committee.

Republican national committee.

I say that the Commissioner of Pensions can not be ignorant of such facts as these, because it is his own regulation, and printed here, that no one has the right to use these blanks except members of Congress, and yet here are these slips going into the hands of a politician, and this claimant being told that this is what the Republican party is doing for him. I know you do not indorse it, but I think it is time to stop it. But why is the delay in pension

We have the Record and Pension Office in the War Department. the most efficient that was ever known under this Government. It could handle, in addition to its own work, the entire pension business, and, under its present management, inside of four years every last claim would be disposed of and settled. It is nothing but dilatoriness and intentional dilatoriness. We are appealed to to mete out justice to these men. They appeal to us, and I say to you I do not know of a man upon the Invalid Pension Committee but what gives careful and close study and attention to these tee but what gives careful and close study and attention to these bills, and refuses to report them unless the reporting of them is justified. There is a bill on the desk of the gentleman from New Hampshire over there, that I introduced, for the widow of a soldier who died from injuries received in the service. They refused to grant the amount I asked for, and will report in favor of $12 a month because of the law. The law should provide just as good a pension for a private's widow as it does for a captain's widow.

I hate the distinction that a woman may receive $30 or $25 a month because her husband was an officer, while the private's widow must earn her living over the washtub, when it was the private who faced the danger and won the glory, and I believe he ought to have equal credit, and that his widow should have equal rights as a pensioner with the widow of a captain or lieu-tenant. Now, will you change this law? I have pleaded with this committee to appoint a subcommittee to take this matter in charge and endeavor to draft a revised law that will meet conditions to-day. I have asked the chairman to do it. We will pretions to-day. I have asked the chairman to do it. We will present to you a law that will do away with all this kind of legislation. Will you support it? Until we can do this, I appeal to you to cease quibbling and let the business of this House go on.

[Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH BOWERS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 428) granting a pension to Sarah Bowers, widow of Joseph R. Bowers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Bowers, widow of Capt. Joseph B. Bowers, late of Company F, Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read, and agreed to:

Strike out all of lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of Sarah Bowers, widow of Joseph R. Bowers, late captain Company F, Third Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Sarah Bowers."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH CHURCH.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3240) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Church.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Church, late of Company H, Twenty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read and agreed to:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH O. FIELDS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2561) granting a pension to Sarah O. Field.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah O. Field, former wife of Pleasant Field, late of Company A, Sixty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read and agreed to:

In line 6, before the word "former," strike out the word "Field" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Fields."

In same line, after the word "Pleasant," strike out the word "Field" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Fields."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Sarah O. Fields."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LEIGHTON J. FOLSOM.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 287) granting an increase of pension to Leighton J. Folsom.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Leighton J. Folsom, late of Company F, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JEREMIAH EVANS.

In line 8 strike out "twelve" and substitute therefor the word "eight."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report read. That bill seems to be singularly worded.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The report (by Mr. Selby) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Selby) was read, as follows:

The committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2620) granting a pension to Jennie A. McKinley, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with amendments:

The claimant, whose post-office address is Fulton, Whiteside County, Ill., is the widow of Albert S. McKinley, who served as a private in Captain Morgan's company of lowa Mounted Volunteers from June 10, 1884, to September 11, 1848. The soldier in his lifetime made an application for pension under the Mexican war service act of January 29, 1887, and upon a showing in the records that his enlistment was for the war with Mexico he was granted a pension at $8 per month. Subsequently, in accordance with the holding that the Mexican war had really ended at the time of the soldier's service, proceedings were begun to drop his name from the rolls, but this action was never carried into effect, and he was subsequently allowed the increase to $12 per month provided by the act of January 5, 1836.

The soldier died May 29, 1896, and his widow filed a claim for pension, which was rejected on the ground that the soldier was not in Mexico or on the coast or frontier thereof or en route thereto, and that he did not enlist until after the close of the war.

The claimant, who is now about 56 years old, married the soldier December 15, 1886, and the testimony shows that she is without property, subject to disease of the heart, and in such a condition from obesity (weighing about 270 pounds) that she can do but little, if any, work, even about her household, by which to aid in her support, and she is now dependent almost wholly upon a son who has a family of his own to care for.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended with the following amendments:

In line 3, after the word "hereby," insert "authorized and."

In line 4, after the word "hereby," insert "authorized and."

substitute therefor "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension ws."

In line 5 strike out "the late."
In line 6, after the word "McKinley," insert the word "late."
In lines 7 and 8 strike out "during her natural life and widowhood."
In line 8 strike out "twelve" and substitute therefor the word "eight."

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask why the bill is worded in that way. When the widow remarries, of course she relinquishes her claim for pension.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will state to the gentleman that the bill has been amended in that respect, and as amended is in the regular form.

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEFA T. PHILIP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1948) granting an increase of pension to Josefa T. Philip.
The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Josefa T. Philip, widow of John W. Philip, late rear-admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Capron, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry private bills, and had directed him to report them back to the House, some with amendments and some without, favorably.

COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AFFAIRS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution. The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on Insular Affairs be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by the said committee during the Fifty-seventh Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.
On motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

An act (S. 3199) to amend the code of laws for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

RAILWAY BRIDGE NEAR HOGANSBURG, N. Y.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 8761) to declare the international railway bridge over the St. Lawrence River, near Hogansburg, N. Y., a lawful structure. The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas by act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River," approved March 2, 1897, authority was granted for the construction of a bridge across the southerly channel of the St. Lawrence River from a point on the right or southerly bank thereof, near the village of Hogansburg, N. Y., as in said act set forth; and

Whereas said bridge was not completed until after the expiration of three years from the date of approval of said act, but is now completed and is in operation and in use as a post route and for purposes of commerce with a foreign nation: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said bridge be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a lawful structure.

Sec. 2. That the rights, powers, privileges, and franchises granted in and by said act of Congress be, and the same are hereby, confirmed in the Northern New York Railroad Company, its successors and assigns: Provided, however, That all obligations and duties imposed in and by said act shall also remain in force.

There being no objection, the House proceeded with the consideration.

There being no objection, the House proceeded with the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

And then, on motion of Mr. Sulloway (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned till Monday next.

Joint resolution was read at length, as lonows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the succession to the Presidency in certain cases.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures in the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"In all cases not provided for by Article II, clause 5, of the Constitution where there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE PHILIPPINES.

ISTHMUS OF DARIEN CANAL.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may lie upon the table for the present, in order that I may call it up at some future time and address the Senate upon it. I ask that the joint resolution may be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 45) providing for a board to investigate the practicability of constructing a canal across the Isthmus of Darien, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint a board consisting of three persons, one of whom shall be an Army engineer, one a civil engineer of known skill and experience in tunnel engineering, and one a contractor expert in the work of tunnel construction and rock excavation: Provided, That no member of the board shall be in the employ of any interoceanic canal or construction company or companies, or shall have any interest in the business or securities of such company or companies, or in any concessions or contracts pertaining thereto. And said board shall consider and report on the practicability and cost of constructing a tunnel through the Cordillera Range of mountains, on the Atlantic side of Central America, to the north of the Isthmus of Darien, and along the interoceanic canal route known as the San Blas route, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, by way of the Gulf of San Blas on the east, a tunnel 5 miles in length through the Cordillera range of mountains, an open cut to the Mamoni River, thence to the Bayamo River, to the Bay of Panama on the west. To this end the board will, as soon as practicable, and not later than three months, report to the President, who shall submit the same to Congress, as follows:

1. Opinion as to whether a tunnel through the Cordillera Range of mountains, 5 miles in length and of sufficient width and height to admit the easy passage to and fro of the largest steam and sailing ships now afloat, can be constructed.

2. An estimate of the cost of constructing such a tunnel, and the time required to drive it, based upon existing tunnel contracts, and prices paid for constructed.

2. An estimate of the cost of constructing such a tunnel, and the time required to drive it, based upon existing tunnel contracts, and prices paid for tunnel construction and rock excavation work during the past five years, and the mechanical appliances and blasting forces employed in such work at the present time.

3. Such recommendation as the board may desire to make as to the method of construction and future operation.

To meet the expenses of said board there is hereby appropriated the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, provided that the officer detailed from the Corps of Engineers shall not receive any salary except that due to his rank, and the compensation to be paid to the remaining members of the board shall not exceed the sum of $35 per diem, exclusive of expenses, from the date of their appointment to the date their report is submitted to the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the joint resolution will lie on the table, subject to the call of the Senator from West Virginia.

Curred by them in defense of the United States," being Document No. 133, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, which I move be referred to the Committee on Claims, and printed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, some of the claims referred to in the amendment presented by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] as estimates from the Treasury Department have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations as amendments to the urgent deficiency bill. Unless the Senator wants to examine them especially, I suggest that he had better let them go to the Committee on Appropriations to be considered immediately. If the Committee on Appropriations find that they can not take jurisdiction of the subject they will have them sent to the Committee. diction of the subject, they will have them sent to the Committee on Claims

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senator from Maine that my purpose was to first get the approval of the Committee on Claims, if possible, and then have the amendment referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. But does the Senator think the Committee on Claims will be able to act in time, as the urgent deficiency bill will be taken up to-morrow? I know the Senator has the same object in view that I have.

object in view that I have.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask, then, that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. For the present.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; so that we can get action in time.

Mr. HALE. I think that is better.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let the proposed amendment and the papers be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CLAPP, it was Ordered, That the affidavits and accompanying documents filed in connection with Senate Report No. 1215, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, upon memorial of Dr. R. B. Leach, be returned to said R. B. Leach.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

On motion of Mr. NELSON, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. 1791) relating to the transportation of merchandise between the United States and foreign ports, to bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property, and the bill (S. 1792) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property," be reprinted.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR SEWELL.

Mr. KEAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator from New Jersey, Hon. WILLIAM J. SEWELL, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

AUSTRALIAN TAX SYSTEM.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that Senate Document No. 209, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, which is a report of the Australian tax system by the revenue commissioner of Colorado, be reprinted with the corrections. The other print was erroneous in some respects. This is an important matter, and I ask that it be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

and it is so ordered.

HELEN A. B. DU BARRY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed a bill (S. 1037) granting an increase of pension to Helen A. B. Du Barry. I desire now to move that the several votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and passed, be reconsidered, and that the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return the bill to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, read the third time, and passed, are reconsidered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] is recognized.

Dubois] I self that the Associated Press dispatch from

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that the Associated Press dispatch from Manila which I send to the desk may be read. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WOULD GAG DR. SCHURMAN—HIS BOSTON SPEECH CAUSES GREAT ANNOY-ANCE IN MANILA.

MANILA, January 24, 1902.

Manila, January 24, 1902.

Both the civil and military authorities here deprecate the publication in the Philippines of Professor Schurman's Boston speech and the minority report in the Senate on the Philippine tariff bill, which, they say, are liable to have a bad effect on the Filippines. General Wheaton, commander of the Department of the North Philippines, says men have been sent to prison here for remarks such as those of Professor Schurman, and that if what he advocates was accomplished it would mean the expenditure of much treasure and the shedding of blood like water. Now, as before, he adds, 50,000 soldiers are needed here, and will be required in these islands for at least five years. It will then be possible to form a government based on that of the colonies of Holland and Great Britain, they having proved the most successful managers of oriental races.

Mr. LODGE. What is that? Mr. DUBOIS. It is an Associated Press dispatch from Manila.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho rises to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I think the President of the United States ought to reprimand General Wheaton and those other officers of the Army and Navy who are criticising the action of the United States Senate and stating what effect it is going to have over in the Philippines. Those officers are creatures of Congress. I do not know who General Wheaton is, particularly, but I imagine he was a charity boy who was appointed to West Point by some Senator or Representative and was educated by the Gov-ernment. Those officers criticise the Senate in regard to legislation which is being proposed. It is outrageous and indecent, and I think, as I have said, General Wheaton ought to be reprimanded

I think, as I have said, General Wheaton ought to be reprimanded by the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, does not the Senator think it would be desirable as a preliminary to find out whether General Wheaton said what he is reported as having said? It is possible he has been misquoted. There have been mistakes in dispatches, and it seems to me this would be an injustice to an officer of very high standing in the Army. It would be desirable to know whether he did say it before we proceed to censure him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is not admitting that General Wheaton ought to be censured?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is not admitting that General Wheaton ought to be censured?
Mr. LODGE. I admit nothing.
Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not suppose there is any question but what General Wheaton said it.
Mr. LODGE. There may be a great deal of question about it.
Mr. TELLER. In one of the morning papers I find the following, dated Ithaca, N. Y., January 26:

Ing, dated Ithaca, N. Y., January 26:

President Schurman to-day made a statement explanatory of his recent Boston speech, in which he advocated the eventual independence of the people of the Philippines. The substance of the speech was that if the Christians of Luzon and Visaya wanted independence and showed themselves capable of assuming it this country would eventually give it to them.

President Schurman said to-day that he believed the policy he advocated would, more than anything else, promote the welfare of the Filipino. President Roosevelt, he said, had declared in his message to Congress that we were to do for the Filipinos far more than any other nation had ever done for a tropical people, and that we were to fit them for self-government after the manner of really free races. He said he stood with President Roosevelt in his policy and was against that advocated by General Wheaton, which would mean colonial servitude like that of Java and India.

I want to assure the Senator from Massachusetts that I think

I want to assure the Senator from Massachusetts that I think Professor Schurman's criticism was uttered just as indicated, and I think the Senator, if he will look into the report of General MacArthur, will find that he makes the same kind of criticism of everybody who had been discussing this question.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, that is one of the blessings to come from our course in the Philippine Islands. Not only are the people to have their mouths closed, but a padlock is to be put upon the United States Senate, so that a committee will not be allowed to make a report which they think ought to be made without some military officer declaring that it is inciting treason.

Mr. President, I do not suppose there is a Senator on the other side of this Chamber who has been in accord with the Adminis-tration policy, with the exception of probably two or three, who would dare to read the Declaration of Independence in this Chamber. If they would, somebody would get up on the other side and declare that that was inciting rebellion and that he was a traitor. I do not know whether such a Senator would come under one of the two classes we hear about in the Philippines war rebels and war traitors-and I do not know under which war rebels and war traitors—and I do not know under which class a committee of the Senate would come.

But here is a clean criticism, Mr. President. It is a criticism that has found a place in practically all the Republican newspapers of this country since that minority report was made. I do not think that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] is at all premature in calling the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what I mean is this—

The DEFSIDENT run tempore. The debeta is preceding by

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will be allowed to go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the Senator will proceed

Mr. LODGE. If there is any objection to my continuing, of course, I will stop.

Mr. SPOONER (to Mr. Lodge). Rise to a question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts, unanimous consent having been given to his proceeding, as the Chair understands.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose I could rise to a question of personal privilege, because the privileges of the Senate seem to be involved.

Mr. President, what Professor Schurman said in Boston, or the explanation he has since seen fit to make, is something, it appears to me, that does not concern us here. The only point that is made is that a general of the United States Army is reported to have made a comment on the minority report of the Philippine Com-

I never heard of an officer being condemned on a newspaper report without at least asking him whether he had said what he was reported to have said, whether he was correctly reported, or was reported to have said, whether he was correctly reported, or whether he said anything at all—

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. Excuse me one moment. I have the floor.

I think to assume that an officer is guilty whether he committed an offense or not—which I am not prepared to admit—but to assume that he is guilty of what is charged to him in a newspaper dispatch is going rather hastily and rather far.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator might allow me to finish my sentence—I shall occupy but a moment—unless he wants to ask me a question.

Mr. RAWLINS. I want to ask the Senator a question. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield? Mr. LODGE.

With pleasure.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator is better informed upon the matter than I am, because he has more accurate sources of information, but I am informed that all these dispatches are, before they are sent out, first censored by the very officials to whom this language is ascribed. I am speaking generally. I want to ask the Senator if he knows whether any inquiry has been made from Washington by the superiors of this officer as to the correctness or incorrectness of this statement?

Mr. LODGE. I am not informed on that point, I will say to the

Mr. RAWLINS. Then, before the Senator rises to question the accuracy of this statement, does he not think that those having the control of this officer and the propriety of his conduct would do well to ascertain whether this statement is true or not?

Mr. LODGE. They may have done so; we do not know; the Senator from Utah does not know; nobody knows anything about it except what is stated in the Associated Press dispatch. That is what I object to. Mr. RAWLINS. But, Mr. President, I think we on this side of the Chamber and the country have a right to presume that, as all these dispatches are censored under military authority, they are correct unless there is some proof to the contrary.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that they are censored under military authority or anything of the kind. There is no censor-

Mr. CARMACK. When did it cease?

Mr. LODGE. It ceased a long time ago.

Mr. CARMACK. This newspaper man does not seem to know it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see that there is anything for us to do in the matter. I certainly do not think it worth while to discuss anything quite so silly as the statement that any Senator would refrain from reading the Declaration of Independence if he wanted to do so. A great many of us have read it, and we have had it read here; but I do not think we ought to take action which would look toward condemning an officer of the Army on the faith of a newspaper dispatch, which apparently has had no confirmation, which may be under inquiry at the War Department at this moment, and which, for aught any of us know, may be entirely wrong.

Mr. McCOMAS. Before the Senator takes his seat, I want to remind him that I have just read that dispatch, and the only statement is that General Wheaton made a comment upon an alleged statement of Professor Schurman. There is not even any statement, as here urged, that he has made comment upon any report or any proceeding in the Senate. That dispatch is dated Manila, and may not even be true. It is not, however, as broad as Senators seem to think.

Mr. LODGE. What was read by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Mr. LODGE. What was read by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DuBois] included apparently a comment on a Senate report. Of course what General Wheaton says in regard to President Schurman I think he had a perfect right to say, if he desired to do so. Mr. McCOMAS. That is all that was said.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the dispatch be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the dispatch again? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WOULD GAG DR. SCHURMAN—HIS BOSTON SPEECH CAUSES GREAT ANNOY-ANCE IN MANILA. MANILA, January 24, 1902.

Manila, January 24, 1902.

Both the civil and military authorities here deprecate the publication in the Philippines of Professor Schurman's Boston speech and the minority report in the Senate on the Philippine tariff bill, which, they say, are liable to have a bad effect on the Filipinos.

General Wheaton, commander of the Department of the North Philippines, says men have been sent to prison here for remarks such as those of Professor Schurman, and that if what he advocates was accomplished it would mean the expenditure of much treasure and the shedding of blood like water. Now, as before, he adds, 50,000 soldiers are needed here and will be required in these islands for at least five years. It will then be possible to form a government based on that of the colonies of Holland and Great Britian, they having proved the most successful managers of oriental races.

Mr. LODGE. Now, Mr. President, it appears on a careful reading of that dispatch—Idid not hear the first part of it; I only heard the allusion to General Wheaton—that General Wheaton is not quoted as referring to the minority report of the Senate. He is quoted as referring to what President Schurman said, and the statement in regard to the minority report of the Senate committee is the statement of the author of the dispatch himself.

Mr. FORAKER. And this further ought to be borne in mind that what General Wheaton is reported as having commented upon as what is reported to have been said by Dr. Schurman is not reported in this dispatch. So that even if what General Wheaton said about Dr. Schurman be true, we do not know what it was he had in mind when he made that comment.

Mr. LODGE. He had the right to make comment on President Schurman, but there is not a trace in that dispatch to show that he made any comment upon the minority report.

Mr. FORAKER. Dr. Schurman had the right to say what he did say; and nobody knows what was reported in Manila as having been said by him.

Mr. TELLER. Professor Schurman's speech at Boston was published in all the daily press of the country, and if it went to the Philippine Islands, as it must have done in some shape, it was just as he says, a declaration that ultimately those people ought to have independence. I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the suggestion of mine may be silly, but anybody who would criticise the speech that Professor Schurman made at Boston would criticise the Declaration of Independence if he dared to. The principles are the same. If those people are enti-tled to independence, and we are going to give it to them, and to say that we are going to give it to them is dangerous to peace and good order, any declarations such as those made by the fathers of the Republic in the Declaration of Independence, in their addresses to our people and to the people of Canada, and the petitions which were sent to Great Britain would be offensive to the oligarchy out there in the Philippine Islands. That is exactly the same kind of stuff that has been going through this country for the last eighteen months or two years. Every man who stood here and complained of the attitude of this Government, who stood for what the country had always stood for, has been practically charged with treason. I saw in the Republican press within a few days a criticism of a speech made by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in the Senate, which has been going the rounds.

When I say here that this system is going to put a padlock upon the mouth of the American people, I say what is true. A padlock is also to be put upon this Senate, and I want to say that, no matter what the criticism is, there will be somebody found here to justify it; there will be somebody to stand here and excuse it. I do not know why the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] may not as well do it as anybody else, as he especially represents on this floor the Administration on the Philippine question. I expect him to do it, Mr. President, and he will have occasion before we get through the debate probably to charge some of the rest of us with treason. It is technical now—I hope that is not offensive, I will not say "silly," but it is technical—for the Senator to say that General Wheaton has not done this or has not done that. This I suppose it perhaps includes all of the civil Commission who were there. I think, if we can trust some of the newspapers, the president of the civil Commission has come very near making the same kind of criticism since he struck American soil.

Every dispatch that has come to this country from the Philippines for two years and more has been carefully censored by the Government officials out there. Just toward the close of the last session of Congress the then Senator from South Dakota, Mr. Pettigrew, presented proof to the Senate, which has never been denied, that a large amount of matter was stricken out of the press correspondence upon the express statement made by the censor there that it would injure the Republican party to have it sent here, and nobody in this country has ever denied it.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. TELLER.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.
Mr. CARMACK. Not only were the facts stricken out, but absolutely false statements were written into the body of reports, and, according to the unanimous testimony of the newspaper men over there, absolutely false and groundless statements were in-serted in them which were nothing akin to truth, but were written into the body of the dispatches by the censor himself.

Mr. President, I want to say, with reference to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] that General Wheaton had the right to make this statement in regard to Pro-fessor Schurman, I do not know; but I question the right of an Army officer in the Philippine Islands to assume to heap insult and denunciation upon private citizens of the United States because they presume to express an opinion as to the policy the United States ought to pursue. I say it is a matter for censure itself that a high officer of the Army of the United States should undertake to offer criticism and censure and insult to men in the United States because they presume to discuss a question in regard to the policy of this Government, and I think he ought to be called down by the President of the United States.

There is another statement in that dispatch. General Wheaton says that men have been sent to prison in the Philippine Islands for saying that the Filipinos eventually ought to have independence; that independence ought to be ultimately given to them. That is a question which, it seems to me, ought to be investigated. If men in the Philippine Islands have been sent to prison for saying that this Government, at some time or other, ought to give independence to the Philippine people, that is a fact which ought to be known.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator from Tennessee leaves the point about censure of Army officers, I should like to direct attention to the fact that the President of the United States recently gave an exhibition of very severe censorship to the General of the Army because he had presumed to coincide with the Admiral of the Navy in expressing his opinion in regard to certain matters as to which the American people agreed with him; and so everybody has been censured.

Mr. CARMACK. In all fairness, I do not think that is exactly an analogous case, but I do think that an officer of the Army—

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.
Mr. FORAKER. I interrupted the Senator in order that I Mr. FORAKER. I interrupted the Senator in order that I might call his attention to the fact that the remark which this dispatch says was made by General Wheaton with respect to Professor Schurman is not a comment upon Professor Schurman, according to the purport of this dispatch, but upon the statement of Professor Schurman that ultimately the Filipinos should be allowed their independence. But this dispatch simply says that General Wheaton made that remark as his opinion of such statements as were attributed to Dr. Schurman. What statements were attributed to him—

Mr. CARMACK. No other statement was attributed to him.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will pardon me, what remarks were attributed to Mr. Schurman in the Philippines nobody here This statement does not indicate. I read in part what Dr. Schurman said at Boston. I took no exception to it. I agreed with him. I have made similar statements on the floor of this Chamber. I shall do so as often as I have occasion to. So far as I have seen he said nothing to be so criticised; therefore I think it must be that the remarks made by Dr. Schurman were misquoted in the Philippines and that General Wheaton had in mind when he made the comment, if he made it at all, something that

Dr. Schurman never stated.

Mr. CARMACK. I think we have a right to assume that the remarks of General Wheaton were based upon the reported reremarks of Dr. Schurman. His reported remarks were that the Philippine Islands ought eventually to be given independence. That is all he is reported to have said, and we have a right to assume that General Wheaton's remarks were based upon that report, and he included in his statement, as I said before, the statement that men in the Philippines have been sent to prison for saying less than that. Now, I say if that is true it ought to be known.

The Senator from Massachusetts says it is silly for anybody to The Senator from Massachusetts says it is silly for anybody to suppose that there is hostility to the Declaration of Independence on the other side of the Chamber. I know there is a great deal of it in the Philippine Islands and among these Army officers, because one of the best informed and most thoroughly reliable newspaper men in this country reported that a high officer of the United States said to him in the Philippines with respect to the Declaration of Independence, which had been translated into the native languages and the Spanish language and was being circulated there, that it was a damned incendiary document. And I lated there, that it was a damned incendiary document. have no doubt that is the secret opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR rose

Mr. CARMACK. I mean the other Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to be permitted to say a word on this subject. I do not think any man in this world would accuse me of having any secret opinion about anything.

I regret very much that this dispatch has been introduced into the Senate. It does not seem to me that an unsupported newspaper rumor about anything or anybody is a sufficient foundation for a debate in the Senate.

Now, as the Senator from Ohio has very clearly and justly observed, nobody knows what has been reported in the Philippine Islands about President Schurman's speech, and nobody knows what General Wheaton said about it there. This thing depends what General Wheaton said about it there. This thing depends on two newspaper rumors, each of them having gone three-quarters of the way around the world. In general, the great part of the newspaper gossip loses pretty much all the truth it has in it in traveling half a mile, and what happens when it travels 8,000 miles I do not know.

If General Wheaton, a high military officer, has undertaken to make comments upon debates in the Senate or upon the public expression of their political opinions of eminent citizens, and I do not see any reason at present for believing he has done so, he has committed what we are assured by the highest military authority in this country, the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Cabinet officer who has charge of such matters, is a grave military offense, and the President of the United States, who while a fearless and earnest man is an eminently just man, will see that military officers who say such things about opinions the President does not like will be punished quite as severely as military officers who say such things about opinions that he does like.

I think we can trust this whole matter to the justice of the If General Wheaton has said what is imputed, and I see not the slightest reason for believing he ever said it, but if, as is most improbable, he has said it, he will be reprimanded before he gets through.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. HARRIS on the 23d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings and testimony before that committee on subjects referred to it, the expenses thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2106) providing for the improvement, repair, and an addition to the public building at Jacksonville,

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the post-office and custom-house building in the city of Jacksonville, Fla., to be improved, repaired, and an addition constructed thereto, at a total cost not to exceed

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLEARWATER VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SIMON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2632) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Clearwater Valley Railroad Company a right of way through the Nez Perces Indian land in Idaho.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the act referred to so that the time for constructing the railroad through the Nez Perces Indian Reservation in the State of Idaho, and also through the lands formerly embraced within that reservation but now allotted to individual members of the Nez Perces tribe of Indians, shall be extended to the 28th day of February,

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY, ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., January 24, 1902.

Hon. Knute Nelson,

United States Senate.

Dear Sir: I have read carefully the discussion going on in the Senate for and against including the Department of Labor in your bill for the establishment of a department of commerce, and send you herein a few facts bearing upon the matter from the standpoint of the Knights of Labor.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. W. HAYES, General Secretary-Treasurer.

To the United States Senate.

Gentlemen: The opposition to the Labor Department being included in the proposed department of commerce is confined to a few labor men who probably have "axes to grind" with the present organization of the Department. The great mass of organized labor will be glad to see it included in the new department, so that there may be a competent and responsible head to direct its work. This is the more necessary from the point of view of organized labor, because from the very beginning the Department has been conducted as a personal asset of the Commissioner. It has been of little consequence or value to those whom it was organized to aid, and more than one-half of its reports are false and misleading.

A department of labor with a secretary of labor entitled to a seat in the President's Cabinet would be very acceptable to the working men of the country, but the realization of such a thing is so far remote that it is not worthy of attention. There is nothing in the present nor in the near future to warrant even the hope that Congress will establish an executive department of the exclusive benefit of the workingman.

Hoo upper the congress will establish an executive department for the exclusive benefit of the workingman.

Hoo in the proposed department of commerce as a decided step forward to the control of the control of the control of the interests of our industries and help to increase the sale of American products will be a benefit to the workingmen who help to make and transport those products, and any measure that will tend to bring the Labor Department nearer to a Cabinet position, where the interests of the workingmen and women can be directly considered and acted upon with as much freedom and with as much right to demand a hearing as the interests of the commerce in any interest of the commerce and indorsement of the masses of workingmen, whether organized to bring together under one responsible head all the bureaus in other departments which have any relation or connection with the commercial and manufacturing interests of the country.

It has been said that the Labor Department has no connection with these interests, that it is an educational and scientific bureau, etc. This sounds well, but I venture to say that the honorable gentlemen who hold these views are not very well acquainted with the means that are employed by the Labor Department.

The Labor Department as, or ought to have a much relation to the manufacturing and commercial interests as any other branch of the Government well as the position t mended the enactment of a law establishing a department of labor. The report will be found on page 1532, Proceedings of the General Assembly, 1887, and is as follows:

"I believe the day has come for united labor to ask at the hands of Congress the passage of a law creating a department of labor at the seat of the National Government. I would respectfully ask of the committee on legislation to prepare a bill and introduce it to the Congress at the next session. We have to-day a Department of War; we do not need it at all in comparison to a department of labor. The Navy Department is not such an important one, for we do not require the use of a very extensive National Navy. The prosperity of the whole country rests on the broad shoulders of labor, and there is nothing now so prominently before the nation and the world as the question of labor. Nearly every action taken now by the Executive or his Cabinet deals in one way or another with the questions of labor; its ramifications extend everywhere, its power is felt everywhere, and its usefulness is now recognized everywhere. All this being true, it is no more than just that the President should have, as a member of his Cabinet, a man who represents more than war, more than a few vessels, more than a sentiment, more than a class. Labor can not be called a class, for it is everywhere. To have a man in his Cabinet with whom to consult on the questions of labor, the President would be in a better position to deal with the questions of labor, the President would be in a better position to deal with the questions of labor, the President would be in a better position to deal with the questions of labor, the President would be in a better position to deal with the questions of the prema, but it will not receive any more unless it asks for it. I recommend that it ask for the establishment of a department of labor."

This recommendation was referred to the committee on legislation who, after considering the matter, reported—page 1776, proceedings of the general assembly, 1

"Among the measures that were intrusted to our care by the general assembly at its session in Minneapolis, 1887, we have to report the following in relation thereto: "DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

"DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

"The bill to create a Department of Labor was introduced in the House from the Committee on Labor by Representative John J. O'Neill, chairman of that committee, on March 15. It passed the House on April 18; was by the Senate referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and reported back by the chairman of that committee, Senator Blair, and passed the Senate with certain amendments on May 22. Conferees were appointed to meet those appointed from the House on the amendments offered by the Senate. The Senate and House conferees met on May 31, and agreed upon the amendments."

A reading of the law shows that it is the duty of the Commissioner.

The Senate and House conferees met on May 31, and agreed upon the amendments."

A reading of the law shows that it is the duty of the Commissioner—

"To acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information upon subjects connected with labor in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word, and especially upon its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity."

Section 7 sets out in detail just what the duties of the Commissioner shall be in properly carrying out the aims and objects of the law. It does not provide that statistical information bearing upon the questions of labor shall be guessed at and written up by agents who are miles away from the manufacturing institutions which they are supposed to have visited and collected the information from. It does not provide for the collection of statistics bearing on the number of divorces granted in the United States. It does not provide for the collection of sages, prices, etc., which can be changed and compiled to suit the political party in power at the time. It does not provide that special statistics be collected and compiled to favor a particular political party, and circulated previous to an election. In other words, it does not provide that the Department should be a Democratic Department when the Republicans are in power, and a Republican Department when the Republicans are in power, and a Republican Department when the Republicans are in power, and compiled that the Department should be a Democratic operation and a labor saviors.

It provides that honest and reliable information shall be collected. com-

Department shall be run as an experimental station to exploit the theories and fancies of a lot of deluded so-called economists, statisticians, and labor saviors.

It provides that honest and reliable information shall be collected, compiled, and published in the interest of the people. We have no hesitation in saying that this has not been the case regarding all of the statistical information so far collected and published by this department.

It is doubtful if we will ever be honored with a department of labor whose secretary will comprise one of the President's Cabinet, and some recognition at the hands of the President. It can not get this recognition nor be represented in the Cabinet unless we accept the proposition submitted by the honorable Senator, Mr. Nelson, and place the Labor Bureau, for that is all it amounts to, under the jurisdiction and control of the department of commerce. This will make it incumbent upon the secretary to be ever watchful of the interests of all branches and bureaus of his department. It will enable the, workers to bring all matters bearing upon the interests of labor to the attention of the President and his Cabinet, and give us an advocate and representative at all sessions. In the event of great labor disturbances throughout the country we will have a secretary with authority to use his great office in the interest of a proper adjustment of said disturbances. It will force and compel the consideration by the Cabinet, of all such disturbances, and we camplok forward to a more speedy and just settlement of such affairs.

Compare a department with authority to act and to whom the people of the entire country would look and expect an honest and just opinion with the miserable apology or makeshift offered us through the present Department of Labor, without authority to recommend, with simply the power to investigate and report, with the privilege accorded its representative to sit in the anteroom while the Cabinet officers are discussing matters in which labor is interested, wit as it would have a right to demand and insist upon a just consideration of its interests?

I trust that the members of Congress and the Senators of the United States will see this matter in the same light that we do, and will place the present Labor Bureau in the department of commerce, and later, when the opportunity is ripe for adding another member to the official family of the President, we may be able to have a secretary over a department of labor and industries.

JNO. W. HAYES, General Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. NELSON. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pettus] to strike out the Department of Labor from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, page 3, lines 18 and 19, strike out the words "the Department of Labor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question? Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have listened to some of the arguments which have just been presented to the Senate to show why the Labor Bureau should be put in this proposed new department, but none of them satisfy my mind. have in my hands a protest coming from large labor organizations against this action, and I will read it to the Senate. It is addressed to the Senate. It was handed to me, and perhaps should have been submitted at the time petitions and memorials were presented, but it may as well be done now.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1902.

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

As the representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, I earnestly but respectfully protest, on behalf of these organizations, against that part of the pending bill (S. 559) which proposes to place the Department of Labor under the department of commerce.

The Department of Labor was created in the general labor interests of the country upon the recommendation and influence of organized labor. The Department of Labor's usefulness has been steadily growing, and its benefits to the laboring classes are unquestioned. To subordinate this Department, as is proposed in this bill, might render it useless for the purposes for which it was created, because it would be subject to the domination of a cabinet officer who might be selected at the instance of and in the interests of employers of labor rather than at the instance of and in the interest of the laboring people themselves.

themselves.

It is the hope of the laboring people of this country that an independent Department of Labor having a Cabinet officer as its official head may be created. This element of our citizenship, comprising as it does the great majority of our population, is certainly worthy of such recognition, and that, too, by this Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. Fuller signs this memorial as the representative of the dif-

Mr. Fuller signs this memorial as the representative of the different organizations named.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me it is a perfectly reasonable anticipation that in case this new Cabinet officer is selected it will be insisted that the Secretary shall be a man who is familiar with commerce—who is connected with great commercial enterprises—and he will necessarily be in sympathy with the employers of labor rather than with the laborers themselves.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I observe that the memorial he has read is signed only by a person named Fuller.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. WELLINGTON. There are a number of organizations named there, and they are powerful ones. It seems to me that if named there, and they are powerful ones. It seems to me that if they intended to send to the Senate of the United States any communication it would be sent officially by them and signed by their officers. I question, as that document is signed, whether we can consider it as coming from the allied organizations which it pretends to represent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This gentleman, Mr. Fuller, has been in Washington as the representative of these labor organizations in washington as the representative of these labor organizations for a number of years. I know him personally. I have known him for a long while. I have never been present at one of these labor meetings, but I have no more doubt that he represents the labor organizations which are specified here than I have that the Senator from Maryland represents his State.

Mr. LODGE. I will say, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, that Mr. Fuller appeared before the Committee on Immigration the other day in connection with the proposed Chinese-explusion act, and he presented formal credentials from Chinese-exclusion act, and he presented formal credentials from all those organizations authorizing him to represent them in regard to legislation pending in Congress. I think there is no doubt of his authority at all.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts. I know that Mr. Fuller has represented these labor organizations here for years. I know that he has presented the arguments in favor of legislation that these organizations have been interested in. He has conducted himself like a gentleman, and seems to me to be a clear-headed, strong man. himself a practical railroad man; he has been a workman on the railroads, and is connected with them, and is familiar with their affairs. He is a man of intelligence and integrity, and the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland that there is any doubt about his representing the people he claims to represent I think is entitled to no consideration and is unwarranted and not sus-

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi, and I will state to him that I refer to Mr. H. R. Fuller.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield also to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I merely desire to say that the objection I found to the paper is, in my judgment, well founded upon its face. I do not think that it is proper for a single person to send to the United States Senate a communication pretending to repreto the United States Senate a communication pretending to represent a large body of organizations that have their official heads. If they desire to address the Senate upon any matter, it seems to me that the communication should be officially perfect, and that me that the communication should be officially perfect, and that this paper is not upon its face. Of course, I accept the explanation offered, but I do intend to say that I was warranted in finding fault with the communication as it was read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, these labor organizations do not stay all the time in Washington. The men constituting these organizations have something else to do. They earn their bread by the sweat of their faces all the days of their lives, and they are busy at something else besides being here. But when they have an intelligent representative, a man who stays here to they have an intelligent representative, a man who stays here to represent their interests, and who reports to them, I think he has a right to speak for them, and the Senate has a right to listen to what he says

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.
Mr. CULLOM. I merely desire to add that I myself, as chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, know this gentleman, and heretofore he has been before our committee, I think at least twice. He always, I think, came to represent these organizations, and I never heard anyone raise a question as to the ganizations, and I never heard anyone raise a question as to the fact. I think he is a gentleman worthy of respect.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have known Mr. Fuller for some years. He has borne himself like a gentleman and has conducted himself like a man of sense and ability. He has rendered valuable services, to my certain knowledge, to the organizations he represents here, and I think he is entitled to the consideration and respect of every member of this body as well as of the people outside.

The argument presented by him that this new department of commerce is more likely to have at its head a man in sympathy with the employers of labor than of labor itself seems to me to be a strong reason why the Department of Labor should be allowed to remain as it has been all this time, and, with these anowed to remain as it has been all this time, and, with these organizations, I see no reason why it should be subordinated to any other. I do not believe that there is any good reason for the head of this Bureau being put in any other department. He can go ahead and do his work as he has done it in the past, with just as much credit as he has done it, and that is the best way, in my opinion, to benefit labor of all kinds, organized as well as unorganized, throughout the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pettus].

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when a short time ago we were discussing the matter brought forward by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubous] I did not continue the debate because it was proceeding only by manyimpus consent and there was nothing strictly. ceeding only by unanimous consent and there was nothing strictly before the Senate. I preferred to wait until the bill was brought up before saying anything more.

I wish, in the first place, to apologize for using the word "silly," as applied to anything said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller]. The word came to my lips in connection with his statement that Senators on this side were afraid to read the Declaration of Macandana.

statement that Senators on this side were afraid to read the Declaration of Independence. It requires so very little courage to read that famous document at any time, in any place, in these days, that I did not suppose the Senator meant it seriously; but I had no business to use an unparliamentary phrase.

I also want to say, for the benefit of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack], that secret opinions are hardly a subject for debate. I have no secret opinions. My opinions are very well known on all these subjects, and I do not think it is desirable in debate to impute secret opinions to any one. It is something I debate to impute secret opinions to any one. It is something I shall never do myself. I think we must take each other's opinions as we hear them stated on the floor.

But, Mr. President, I was interested to notice as the debate went on that Senators on the other side were greatly disturbed at anything which seemed to them to look toward the suppression of free speech, and yet they objected with equal strength apparently to free speech by those who differed from them. I was ently to free speech by those who differed from them. I was told, somewhat to my amazement, that I ought not to criticise what President Schurman said because it was practically as sacred as the Declaration of Independence. I have great respect for President Schurman—I have the pleasure of knowing him; but I think he will be somewhat surprised to learn that his remarks were of such a sacred character that I could not criticise them or that no one else was at liberty to criticise them in a fair and proper way. I have not criticised them, for I have not considered that they were the subject of debate. It seems to me that and proper way. I have not criticised them, for I have not considered that they were the subject of debate. It seems to me that it is hardly fair, especially for the champions of free speech, to object to criticisms coming from a different point of view.

Governor Taft was found fault with as proceeding dangerously near the limit to which the right of criticism extended. General Wheaton was found fault with for having, on the faith or a somewhat confused press dispatch, criticised President Schurman. President Schurman was then put on a level with an official court of inquiry, which also surprised me. As I understand it, President Schurman is a private citizen of great eminence, who has made a speech at Boston which has attracted considerable attention, much favorable criticism, and much unfavorable criticism, and it is perfectly fair that it should be discussed.

Now, Mr. President, I think out of this matter of the suppression of free speech a great deal has been made where nothing really exists. So far as my observation goes, there has been the utmost freedom of speech in regard to everything in the Philip-utmost freedom of speech in regard to everything in the Philip-pine Islands ever since we were connected with them. One American citizen at one time saw fit to send out circulars to the soldiers of the American Army, urging them to desert. That seems to me to come pretty well within the definition of treason, but nothing was done about it. No attempt was made to interfere with him, and I think very wisely, for I do not think that what he said was worth serious attention.

worth serious attention.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow an interruption? To whom does he refer as sending out a circular?

Mr. LODGE. The circular was widely spread. It was sent out, I think, by Mr. Edward Atkinson.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Advising soldiers to desert?

Mr. LODGE. Urging soldiers not to serve in the war at the very beginning of the circular. It was widely spread, and was brought to proper attention by-

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was asking for information. I never saw any statement of that sort, and I did not know it was charged that anyone had issued a circular urging soldiers to desert.

Mr. LODGE. The circular urged the soldiers not to serve in this war. I have not seen it for a year or two. It was widely circulated. I do not think I am stating anything new.

Mr. CARMACK. Urging soldiers to desert?

Mr. LODGE. Urging them not to enlist and not to continue to serve in the Army.

Mr. CARMACK. Urging persons not to enlist is a very different matter.

Mr. LODGE. And not to continue to serve.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not to reenlist?

Mr. LODGE. Not to reenlist?

Mr. LODGE. Not to reenlist, they being already there. I only instance it, not to find fault with it, because I thought it was a matter of small consequence, to show that in such an extreme case as that there had been no attempt at suppressing anybody's views.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon an inquiry?

Mr. LODGE.

Certainly.
I do it in order that I may understand what the Mr. BACON. Senator intends to be understood as saying. The Senator first stated, and repeated it, that this circular advised soldiers to desert, using the word "desert." The Senator afterwards said (and I using the word "desert." The Senator afterwards said (and I did not know whether he intended it as a qualification or not) that the circular advised persons against enlisting and advised those then in the Army against reenlisting. Does the Senator mean now to confine his charge to the latter?

Mr. LODGE. I am not making any charge, Mr. President. I am stating the substance of a circular which was issued. I am making no charge against anybody.

Mr. BACON. I am only asking for information. I did not know whether the Senator intended still to be understood as charging that the circular advised soldiers then in the service to desert the service

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that the word "desert" was used in the circular. The purport of it was to induce soldiers out there to leave the Army, to induce them not to reenlist, and induce them to refuse an enlistment. It amounted to getting them to leave the Army and abandon the colors, as I understood it at the time. It was more than two years ago; but that was the purport of the circular, as I remember it. It is a thing that has been forgotten, and it is of no great consequence one way or the other. It was the work of a private citizen, and nobody paid any special attention to it, except, I think, it was printed in the newspapers. Nothing was done about it; it was dropped.

There were many other circulars and addresses that might have been held, I think, to a similar objection. Our Government very wisely did nothing about it. I only instanced them, as I said, to show how extremely liberal the Government has been in everything of that sort.

It seems to me that the champions of free speech especially should not object to persons who hold different views from expressing them. If Governor Taft's views differ from those that are held on the floor of the Senate, I certainly hope that when he comes before the committee of the Senate, as he doubtless will, he will express them with the utmost freedom, and I should not regard it as any infringement of our rights or of anybody else's sight if he did. right if he did. I think that both soldiers and civilians out there will undoubtedly come before the committee, and in that way before the Senate, and will probably express views at variance with those held by Senators, perhaps at variance with the views held by one party or the other, and I think they are perfectly en-titled to set them forth and not to be held accountable for doing It is a bad rule that does not work both ways. There is no it. It is a bad rule that does not work both ways. There is no more reason for this outcry about the suppression of speech in favor of the Filipinos than there is for an outcry against what is said in behalf of the Government and its policy in those islands.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. I only desire, Mr. President, to say these few words in explanation of what has gone before. I shall be very glad to yield now to any Senator on the other side who desires to discuss more directly the bill before the Senate.

Mr. RAWLINS. Before the Senator takes his seat, I would invite his attention to a matter of which he is doubtless aware. He vite his attention to a matter of which he is doubtless aware. He says that anybody in this country ought to be free to express his opinion one way or the other upon this question relating to the Philippines. Of course I agree with him about that, but it is sometimes important for the people in this country to know the opinion of people in the Philippine Islands on the question which divides us here. I ask the Senator if it be not true that the Philippine Commission have passed an act which is now in force in the islands making it a crime for anyone there to express an opinion in favor of according to the people over there their independence?

Mr. LODGE. I have not a copy of the act before me, but I understand they have passed an act making it an offense during the pendency of the insurrection to advocate the cause of those persons who are in arms against the United States, whether it is the cause of independence or any other.

Mr. RAWLINS. I asked this question of the Senator. I asked him if it be not true that the Philippine Commission, declaring that there is no state of war in Manila and in a large part of the archipelago, in that situation passed an act which in express terms denounces and proposes to punish as a crime the expression of the mere opinion that the islands ought to be independent?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose the act which is referred to is an act to suppress encouragement and incitement to the rebellion while the war is in continuance.

Mr. RAWLINS. No, Mr. President; that is not the interrogatory which I put to the Senator. It is whether that act in express terms does not make it a crime for any citizen or resident of the Philippine Islands to express an opinion that the islands ought to be independent, and that that is a distinct crime under an act which was passed by the Philippine Commission.

Mr. LODGE. As I said, I have not the act before me, and I can not read the exact words. I understand that an act of the character to which the Senator refers has been passed by the Philippine Commission, and I began to say what I understood its purose to be. The object of it is to prevent the encouragement of the people now in arms against the United States and to wait until peace is restored throughout those islands before the discussion of questions which lead to a continuation of the insurrection and bloodshed is indulged in.

Such, it seems to me, has been the practice in all countries in time of war. During the war between the States it is well known that in portions of the Northern States, where there was absolute peace reigning, men were arrested and newspapers were suppressed on account of their giving aid and assistance to the enemy, and it was done by Abraham Lincoln. The habeas corpus act was suspended, and it was rightly done, as I believe, because the duty that lay before Mr. Lincoln was the salvation of the country, and other lesser things had to bend to the one I have not any question that in a similar way on the Southern side men who came out in newspapers or otherwise hostile to the cause in which the Southern States were engaged were treated in similar fashion. It is inevitable that that should be.

But where the authority of the United States is attacked by men in arms and war is flagrant in certain limited districts, I think it is the duty of the officers of the United States to prevent what will lead to the encouragement of bloodshed and couragement of further fighting. Their object is to bring that to an end. When peace is restored, then they and everybody else would be glad to have the Filipinos discuss with us what is best to be done for them and to advocate their independence, if they like; but when they come to us with arms in their hands, when our soldiers are engaged in war, it is too much to expect that any officer, military or civil, is going to permit within his jurisdiction incitement to rebellion and to war against the authority which he is bound to sustain, no matter what his views may be. Under these circumstances I think, Mr. President, what has been done is wholly justifiable. It is a course that every country, that every military or civil authority, has always taken in times of war and rebellion directed against the authority of the country represented by its officers

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the Senator concedes that at the time when the Philippine Commission declared there was no war except in a few limited localities in the Philippine archipelago, where a sort of brigandage was being carried on, that body passed an act making it a crime for anyone, without reference to purpose on the part of that individual to encourage insurrection, to express the opinion that the islands ought to be independent-

Mr. CARMACK. Or that the United States should give them

independence

Mr. RAWLINS. Or that the United States should give them independence, or that the policy should be adopted in any man-ner to eventually accord to them independence—that that was a crime. In other words, if a Senator or a member of the House of Representatives, or any representative of this Government going to the islands, as stated in a dispatch from General Wheaton, going to the islands, as stated in a dispatch from General Wheaton, should express the mere opinion that, in his judgment, it would be promotive of peace in the islands, that it would tend to a conclusion of hostilities and the restoration of order, if it should be declared to those people that ultimately they should be independent, it would constitute a crime against the United States, and the punishment is prescribed in the act. Therefore it is declared that if Professor Schwarzer, had been in the interest to be cleared. that if Professor Schurman had been in the islands when he expressed the opinion that ultimately independence ought to be granted to the islands, it would have been a crime, and he would have been sent to prison for such an expression of opinion.

Mr. President, I defy the Senator to find in all the history of wars in this country any such proposition ever before presented. I do not think he can find in the annals of the civil war anywhere in any Northern State, where there did not exist a state of war, in which the mere expression of an opinion on the part of a citizen that the Southern States might be eventually accorded their independence constituted the offense of treason or incitement to Yet that is what this Philippine Commission has insurrection. done. I invite attention to it as showing that, under the authority we have conferred upon that body, they have undertaken to suppress free speech, and that we can not rely upon any opinion which we receive from persons now in the islands and most familiar with the situation there. For anyone there to express an honest, candid opinion as to what the policy of this Government ought to be in respect to those islands over there would constitute a crime for which the individual making the expression is liable to be sent to prison.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me a question there?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not the Senator one of the minority of the Philippine Committee asking the Senate to vote for a proposition which will continue such laws in force? You provide here for the establishment of a stable government at some time in the future, and this proposed minority bill declares:

That until the people of the islands shall establish a government, as here-inbefore provided, all laws, rules, and regulations now in force for the gov-ernment of the islands and the raising of revenue therefor shall be in force, except as the same may be in conflict with this act.

Mr. RAWLINS. That refers to those passed by the Government of the United States, and not to the regulations which have been enacted without any authority, in my judgment, on the part of the Philippine Commission. They have arrogated to themselves the functions of the Congress of the United States. They have undertaken to punish treason, which can only be defined, in my view of the case, by the Constitution of the United States. They have undertaken to do things which the Congress of the United States would not think of doing.

By that minority report we do not propose to dignify the arbitrary and tyrannical acts of that Commission as a part of the proposition presented to the country by the minority. The Senaproposition presented to the country by the minority. The Senator mistakes the purpose of the amendment proposed by the minority. It is that we proceed to deal with those people in accordance with American principles and ultimately accord them independence as soon as a stable government can be established which can regulate the affairs of those people.

But, Mr. President, I can not be diverted from the proposition which I rose to present to the Senate. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] to search the annals of our country; I will go further, and ask him to search the annals of any country in time of peace or in time of war—any country in which there was a pretense of freedom or liberty of speech—to find enactments going to the extent of that to which allusion has been made in this debate this afternoon.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the law to which the Senator from Utah refers, and to which I have been referring, relates, as he knows, to armed insurrection; and the section he is quoting is It is all in connection with armed rebellion in the islands. I think that, where armed rebellion exists in the islands, there is not the slightest difficulty in finding in history parallel cases. I think, for saying somewhat less than has been said in some quarters in the Philippine Islands, Mr. Vallandigham was brought to terms pretty sharply, and was finally sent over the line by Mr. Lincoln from a State in which there was no war and which had never been declared to be in a state of war.

Mr. DUBOIS obtained the floor.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Burrows in the chair).

Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DUBOIS. With pleasure.

Mr. BACON. I beg the indulgence of my friend from Idaho
[Mr. DUBOIS] in order that I may ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] a question. As he has gone into the domain of history, with which he is very much more at home than I claim to be, I should like to ask the learned Senator if he does not recall the fact that, on the floor of the House of Commons, Charles Fox, Edmund Burke, and others openly advocated that independence be accorded to the American colonies?

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly, Mr. President; but we are not discussing what is being said here or in the House of Representatives.

We are discussing what is being said at the seat of war.

Mr. BACON. If it is treason anywhere, it would be treason here. The Senator doubtless recalls the fact not only that I have mentioned, but that in the House of Lords the Earl of Chatham went further, and said, in the dramatic language with which we are all familiar, that if he were an American, as he was an Englishman, he never would lay down his arms in that contest; and nobody ever charged him with treason nor did they charge Charles Fox nor Edmund Burke with treason.

Mr. LODGE. And nobody would think of charging the Senator from Georgia with treason if he were equally eloquent about the Filipinos

Mr. BACON. The Senator knows that. That would be impossible, of course; and the

Mr. LODGE. But I do not think that is what is involved. This relates to publications at the seat of war, in the islands affected thereby, and where the people engaged in the war would be excited and stimulated by the publication.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, in causing the Associated Press dispatch to be read I did not intend at all to criticise or object to free speech or free discussion. The Senator from Massachusetts misunderstood me if he so thought. I want the fullest discussion, not only on the floor of the Senate, but in the committee; but I do object most strenuously to Army officers criticising the action of the Senate.

This dispatch says that the civil and military authorities there all agree that the minority report submitted by the Democratic members of the Senate committee was doing great damage to our cause and encouraging the Filipinos. We have been threatened and blackmailed by these Army officers as long as we should stand it, in my opinion. It is their duty to carry out the instructions of the Government. They naturally want war. They are the only people who thrive on war. It is in exceedingly bad taste, and is offensive to the spirit of our institutions, for military officers in the service of the Government to be criticising the civil reverse and to be threatening these who are making laws. powers and to be threatening those who are making laws. I say that this dispatch on its face is true; it quotes General Wheaton's language, and I think he ought to be reprimanded by the President of the United States.

We have heard this thing for eighteen months or two years. These military officers are threatening all sorts of calamities on account of the action of those who do not agree with them.

account of the action of those who do not agree with them. It is well enough for persons in civil life to criticise our action if they want to do so; but it is in exceedingly bad taste, to say the least, for Army and Navy officers to be eternally threatening the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think in every place, certainly in every tribunal in the world, except, apparently, the United States Senate, the axiom is or ought to be observed, "Hear before you strike." We had an illustration the other day of the danger of acting in a legislative way upon press dispatches. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], assuming that a press dispatch was true, and with a motive which I do not criticise at all, introduced a resolution reciting as established certain facts, among which was a statement that a certain commandant of the Boer army had been sentenced to be executed on the following Satur-It turned out when the resolution came up for discussion that at the time the Senator introduced the resolution the Boer commandant had been executed.

Mr. TELLER. May I ask the Senator if he thinks any serious harm was done by such a resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. I have not said anything of the kind, nor have I criticised the Senator; but I have ventured mildly to suggest that as a fair illustration of the danger of taking things for granted which are not established, especially where they occur far, far away, and of basing the action of the Senate upon mere newspaper dispatches. For the purpose for which I called attention to it, it is certainly abundant foundation for my statement.

General Wheaton is a splendid soldier; he is a man of high character; a man with a magnificent record behind him from the time he became a soldier. It is a strange proposition, Mr. Presi-dent, that on a mere statement of that kind coming from Manila, Senators, members of the confirming body, without whose action he could not hold the rank which he holds to-day, should assume what he is reported to have said as being what he did say, and proceed to denounce him for saying it

If the Senator from Idaho were willing to content himself with the observation that if a general had uttered words which are imputed to him he has committed an infraction of military disci-pline for which he deserves censure, that is one thing, although that might be subject to criticism; but that is a different proposition from that which the Senator makes. He finds the facts and proceeds, so far as he is concerned, to pronounce judgment against this officer, far away and fighting under orders, whether the cause be a just cause or a bad cause. It is much more in harmony cause be a just cause or a bad cause. It is much more in harmony with that sense of fair play and justice which ought to govern all men in their dealings with each other, and which certainly should obtain here in the United States Senate, to first find the facts, ascertain whether any offense has been committed, and then, if justified, pronounce the criticism or the censure.

A telegraphic dispatch to this officer far away from home, serving faithfully in the Philippines, that he has been denounced in the United States Senate by Senators, as having committed an offense, a gross offense, against military propriety, by criticising the Senate, or criticising a minority report in the Senate, will carry hurt to his heart and give him pain. I am not willing for one to assume here at all, and I think in all kindness Senators ought not to assume, simply because in a press dispatch such language is imputed to General Wheaton, that he uttered it, and to base upon it a present condemnation. He is a brave soldier; he not only is a brave soldier, but he is a gentleman. So far as I know, he has never committed any breach of military etiquette or propriety, and I think it is an unfair thing to assume that he has violated military rules and to denounce him as if we knew he had done so. I do not say this by way of rebuke for I have no business to related do not say this by way of rebuke, for I have no business to rebuke anybody. I only speak of it for a moment as a general proposi-

Of course, the Senator from Colorado speaks of criticism in the press of what has been said in the Senate. There has been a vast deal of it.

Mr. TELLER.

Mr. TELLER, That is all right.
Mr. SPOONER. They have a right to criticise our public utterances upon any subject.

Mr. TELLER. I am glad to have them do so.

Mr. SPOONER. They have a right to criticise our utterances made upon any subject made in this body. They have criticised, on one hand, those of us who think we believe in the Declaration of Independence, but do not happen to agree with other Senators in their application of it in a given case; and, on the other hand, they have criticised Senators who entertain different views. We can not complain of that. That is incidental; that is freedom of the press. It is of great value; it is a good thing, Mr. President. But that is a very different proposition from criticising this absent

We here at home are misrepresented in the press. I read coming up this morning a statement in the newspapers as to a report which I, as a member of a subcommittee, had made or agreed to in committee, and I suppose my friend from Ohio read the same thing. There was not a word of truth in it, but I have no doubt the correspondent thought there was. But if we are misrepresented here, how much more likely is an officer 7,000 miles away to be misrepresented in press dispatches.

I know the Senator from Idaho would not willingly do any injustice to any officer of the Army or to anyone else, but I submit to him that it is a dangerous thing to base condemnation—not hypothetical, but to base condemnation absolute in its form-of a brave and gallant officer upon the assumption that there can be no mistake as to the facts, and that because these words are put in his mouth by a newspaper correspondent therefore they must have been uttered by him.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Always when I have the opportunity, and I

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina. Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has always been extremely cour-

Mr. The Braker. The Senator has always been extended courteous, except occasionally when he has failed to yield.

Mr. SPOONER. Not often.

Mr. TILLMAN. Not intentionally, of course, but the Senator has sometimes been so absorbed in the pursuit of his own theme and eloquence, and so loves to listen to himself, that he does not like to be interrupted, and some of us who are listening want to controvert his sophistry or his special pleading are not given an opportunity.

But I rose to ask the Senator what evidence have we got that there is not a censorship in the Philippines to-day such as we know existed there eighteen months ago? We have assertions here, but what proof have we got and who can furnish the proof to-morrow that the Associated Press reporter there, who has been at headquarters of the military general there, as these reporters here are at the headquarters of politics, have misrepresented General Wheaton? Who will furnish the proof that the censorship does not exist and that this was not an inspired dispatch?

Mr. SPOONER. I can not furnish the proof, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. It ought to be furnished by somebody.

Mr. SPOONER. I will tell the Senator I would wait until somebody has had an opportunity to furnish it before I denounced somebody has had an opportunity to furnish it before I denounced

Mr. TILLMAN. I agree with the Senator's defense of General Wheaton, because I recognize him as a very brilliant and gallant officer of our Army doing very dirty work.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, I do not agree with that, of course.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is my opinion, for which I am responsible to the American people and to nobody else.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not mine; but I do not care to enter into a discussion of that now. So far as censorship is concerned, I do ont know whether there is a censorship or not.

Mr. TILLMAN. There ought not to be one. Ought not the American people be allowed to have their press representatives there who will telegraph to their several newspapers what is going on there now?

Mr. SPOONER. That would depend upon circumstances.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suppose the circumstances are these—that Judge Taft comes and tells us that the war is over; that peace is almost universal, except in two provinces, and yet the censorship continues to exist and we are barred from the opportunity of receiving news directly.

Mr. SPOONER. The only time I objected to being interrupted by the Senator from South Carolina was when I feared that if he got in I would not be able to get out. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I will get out now and let you go on for a

Mr. SPOONER. Only a moment. I do not know whether there is a censorship there or not. I have hitherto said on the floor of the Senate, and I repeat it, that in the conduct of military operations on an extensive scale, such as for two years existed in the Philippines, a censorship was not only justifiable, but

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator—
Mr. SPOONER. Excuse me. I did not rise to make a speech, but will debate with the Senator to his heart's content after a while, if he wants to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I presume the Senator is as well prepared as

Mr. SPOONER. I hope, from the observation the Senator has just made, that I am better prepared. [Laughter.] The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringe] recently returned from the Phil-

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator returned from Japan and China. He did not go to the Philippines this last time. Mr. SPOONER. He said he returned from the Philippines. He told me he had.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will take his word.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know but he ought to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he had returned from the Philippines. He said there is no censorship now at Manila. That is all I know about it.

Mr. President, the general proposition is that we ought not as public officials—I care not who they may be or in what grade of the public service they may be, judges, executive officers, military officers, naval officers, or what not—we ought not to denounce them upon mere reports as to conversations, interviews, or some alleged offense. I believe every member of this body will agree alleged offense. I b with me about that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him if he is willing to express an opinion as to the necessity of a censorship between Manila and the United States, necessity of a censorship between Manila and the United States, and to explain why there is a necessity for it. Is any harm to come to the American people from having independent newspaper reporters allowed to report to us what is going on there? The Filipinos can not get any benefit from the information telegraphed home, that I can see. I fail to understand why it is necessary to keep us in the dark as regards what is going on. It is true last week we had notice on the day Judge Taft landed that the reconcentration programme which we denounced in Cuba had been inaugurated by a general of the American Army under the Stars and Stripes—a war on women and children. Is under the Stars and Stripes—a war on women and children.

that true?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not believe it is.
Mr. TILLMAN. Where did it come from? Has the War Department denied or contradicted it?
Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] that we should not denounce a gender of the property of the property of the data with the data wit eral engaged in the performance of his duty until we know exactly what he has done. I should be very much more curious, how-ever, to hear what the Senator would say if he knew that Genever, to hear what the Senator would say it he knew that General Wheaton had said it. That would be of a great deal more importance to me than the proposition he has urged here that General Wheaton should not be denounced in the absence of any testimony corroborative of the fact that he made the remarks.

I desire to say that this is just as I expected. We have a war going on there, although repeated conquering generals have come home each declaring the war was over and had Roman triumphs given them, ovations, troops hurried across the continent, at one time at an expenditure of over $200,000. I can see the difficulty of having a state of war going on seven or eight thousand miles away, and a so-called peace commission there passing laws, mak-ing appropriations, repairing the ships of the United States, acting as a government. There should be no Taft Commission or any other sort of a peace commission there until the country is reduced to a state of peace. It is an admixture of civil and military which can bring no good.

Now, Mr. President, the Constitution does not seem to follow the flag, and as it has turned out by experience, the bill of rights will not prevail in the Philippine Islands under the American will not prevail in the Philippine Islands under the American flag. We, in this Chamber, have no right to complain, however, of this condition of things, because, by the measure framed by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooners] and made a part of an appropriation bill, this Congress abdicated all its powers and made the President of the United States and such persons as he might appoint the selectivity military, and indicate power to ers and made the President of the United States and such persons as he might appoint the sole civil, military, and judicial power to govern the Philippine Archipelago. Why they dissociated the civil and judicial I do not know. But to-day the persons so appointed have absolute control, without responsibility, of all the fortunes and the lives of the people in the disputed territory.

That is our work. That is what we have done for the Filipinos; that is what we have done by the United States and its free people. Who is to hold anybody responsible for anything that is

Who is to hold anybody responsible for anything that is done in the Philippines; who can prevent the President from appointing 500,000 persons at a thousand dollars a day to serve for any indefinite term-for their lives-if he chooses to do it? have enabled him to do it by an amendment on an appropriation bill. Now, in that condition of things, what may we not expect? With enormous power and no responsibility violations of human rights flow as a necessary consequence, as the night follows the day, and you can not prevent it by talking about it here. That is our work.

Mr. President, how long is that thing to continue? The President appointed all he saw fit, and they have gone on, some of them with delegated powers, to make legislation and pass penal statutes, to make appropriations for repairing the Navy, to insti-tute courts, and to constitute offices throughout those islands. They have done everything that sovereignty could do and are responsible to nobody, as sovereignty ought not to be responsible to anybody.

The captain-general of Cuba, who, when he was displaced by the Spanish war, had more power than his master, the King of Spain, who gave him the office; had the power, as was set forth in the articles that constituted that office, of a general commanding a city in a state of siege. The President of the United States has that authority and all those appointed by him have that without and we are not the records to complain because it is authority, and we are not the people to complain, because it is our work. We have not taken care that the bill of rights shall extend even over the American people there, much less over the Filipinos, whose rights nobody feels bound to respect either here or there.

I am not here to-day to speak, nor shall I at any other time, particularly for the Filipinos. In every speech I have made in the Senate, and I have made quite a number, I have said that their fate did not concern me any more than it did those gentlemen who pretended falsely to be concerned about giving them a better government and better religion. I never have believed a solitary man who said that, and I never will. I do not believe that anybody is concerned about giving the Filipino or anybody else a better government, and some are very little concerned about our having a better government, either here or anywhere else.

We can not expect to have anything but violations of the bill of rights and of constitutional rights where there is no constitution and no bill of rights and an irresponsible power without limit. To-morrow that Commission, in their judgment for the good or the pacification of those islands, can select and shoot a thousand Filipinos and confiscate 10,000 estates and put the money in their own pockets, if they chose to be so dishonest. Who would call them to account? Where is the tribunal before which one could prafer a charge against those men? They are responsible only to the President of the United States, and he is responsible to no one. In what forum could they be impeached?

We are trying an experiment in colonization, so called, although it is not colonization in its true sense. It is a military occupation, by these arbitrary and absolute methods. The autocrat of all the Russias has not the power, in the remotest province of his vast Asiatic and European Empire, which is being exercised to-day by civil and military officers in the Philippine Archipelago; and we here are the responsible parties. The Senate put in the amendment, the House concurred in it, and the President signed it. We are committed to it until we have a lucid interval, and we are not likely to have that immediately.

In the meantime these complaints come up of censorship over the correspondents and of newspaper men—censorship over the speech of Americans both in the islands and here—and who is to stop that censorship? It may be very important in the process of carrying on a war in that distant country that everything which might encourage the enemy should be suppressed. That is an act might encourage the enemy should be suppressed. That is an act which I think would come within the purview of the authority of the military governor and not of the civil governor. What right has a civil commission like the Taft Commission—and I want to say now that when I speak of the Commission it is with perfect respect to the honorable gentlemen who compose it—but I say, from its character, what right has it to talk about making reprel statutes to requisit men for offenses which the military say. penal statutes to punish men for offenses which the military say act against their power and against their efficiency in conducting the campaign for the suppression of insurrection, so called, in those islands?

Now, Mr. President, we are just beginning to realize the diffi-culties that we have set up for ourselves in those islands. They are going to get worse and worse, and I am afraid we will not have sense enough, knowing we are on the wrong road, to retrace our steps. We shall persist, doubtless, in spite of the fact that everybody must know that we have done one of the most improvident and foolish things a nation ever did.

Here come back our Army officers, honorable gentlemen, who have had experience in the archipelago, who have met the natives from the different parts, and what do they tell us of the characfrom the different parts, and what do they tell us of the character of the tribes among whom they have been quartered? They tell us that they are the most treacherous, lying, incompetent, foolish, wicked, demoralized people that ever lived in the world. If they tell us the truth, and I have no doubt they are honestly stating their opinions, why do we want to have anything to do with such people? And why should we worry ourselves and pay a million and a half a week to give them a better government without a single solitary compression anywhere in sight. without a single, solitary compensation anywhere in sight—commercial, political, moral, or otherwise? What is the inducement to continue a relation with people so abject and so degraded, so low in the social and moral scale as those people are, according to low in the social and moral scale as those people are, according to the Army officers' reports?

It happens, unfortunately for us, that we are in alliance with that class of the population. With the Mohammedans, with the slave owners, with the polygamists, with the heathen we are in alliance, and are enemies of the Christian people, the Visayas and the Tagalogs, the people among whom are found newspapers and books, and schools and parish churches, and pianos and music, and all the refinements of society; people who, according to the report of our own consul at Manila, send over 5,000 of their youth abroad annually to take university degrees in the oldest institutions of Europe; people who furnished to the provisional congress of Aguinaldo's government when 83 were assembled at Malolos in November, 1898, with more university graduates than ever sat in this Chamber at any one time during its history; people who had been educated and who had been refined and who seemed to feel in their bosoms some of the waking spirit of liberty which we have denied to them. That is the character of the contest to-day.

I do not want to discourage the pacification of the islands, I am sure; I do not believe anybody here does; but, Senators, why can we not look this thing in the face with the cool common sense of American statesmen? Here is a condition which we ourselves American statesmen? Here is a condition which we ourselves have partially brought about, and the means and appliances brought to work to correct it are such as are indefensible in this age of the world. It is a thousand years in civilization since such methods could be employed and such power could be deputed to anybody as we have conferred upon the President and he upon his appointees in the Philippine Archipelago.

Have we been true to our trust as the guardians of the liberty of this people? I have seen enough of denouncing people for their opinions, and therefore I am not prepared to denounce General Wheaton for his, whether he did make the report that it is said he made or not. As far as Dr. Schurman is concerned, I am not particularly his advocate. I did not like the way he spoke before he went on one commission there, or the way he spoke after he got on the Commission. I am not prepared, nor do I care to defend him. I do not want to do anything of the kind. But I recollect that these newspaper reports may be untrue or they may not, but there generally comes along a corroboration in a few days, and when that corroboration comes you will not find a man on the other side who will get up and say a single word

I recollect an instance at the very beginning of the Spanish war, when the report was published in every paper in the East, at least those that I saw, that the President had instructed our representatives near the courts of European sovereigns to assure them that the President did not intend to have any privateers. In the secret session of the Senate I simply called attention to that report. secret session of the Senate I simply called attention to that report. I did not criticise anybody. I merely called attention to the report, not stating it was true, and not making any remarks upon it. But a very distinguished Senator on the other side assured me that I could hardly believe a newspaper report of that character; that I had better wait until it was developed that there was something in it, and he did not believe there was, very much as the eloquent Senator from Wisconsin has spoken this morning about the supposed statement of General Wheaton. The very next day we received a message from the President saying he hed next day we received a message from the President saying he had done that very thing. It was nothing but the baldest usurpation of power, because the Constitution of the United States says in one line that—

The Congress shall have power to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

However, the President took the matter out of our hands, and the telegram which was scouted the day before was found to be true the day after, and not a Senator on the other side had a word to say about it—not one. There was a usurpation of power which nobody could deny. The President had no more to do with issuing letters of marque and reprisal than one of the pages who carry the messages of Senators on this floor.

So these violations of constitutional law, of the fundamental So these violations of constitutional law, of the fundamental institutions of liberty, go on day after day and no mention is made of them. We are getting used to everything. We used to say the eels swam joyfully up the river to be skinned every morning. They got used to it. We speak with "bated breath and whispered humbleness" of the usurpations of the Executive. We gave the President power that no other man enjoys, at least outside of some African tribe, where the heaviest club is the only authority for the rule of the chief. But wherever institutions of liberty are known, wherever constitutions govern, wherever institutions of civilization govern, there is no such power conferred anywhere on anybody.

When are we going to revoke it? The bill had a saving clause when are we going to revoke it. The bill had a saving clause in it—"until Congress shall otherwise direct." Will Congress ever otherwise direct? Why does not the Committee on the Philippine Islands—and that is none of my business, but I put the question—frame a government for the Philippine Archipelago as was done for Porto Rico? It makes no difference that the war is still on. It is always over and yet never ended. One conquering hero returns who never did anything but receive a sham sur-render. He makes a speech and speaks of the Constitution as being an antiquated, worn-out document, no longer of any utility in the government of the American people, something they are quite tired of and have outgrown. He was not reprimanded for his false swearing of allegiance to that document which alone gave him a commission. He was toasted, and feted, and dined everywhere. He was not cashiered and dismissed from the Army. He was a hero.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Has the Senator any other authority for the statement he has just attributed to one of the generals of our Army than mere newspaper report? Mr. MONEY. That is all. Mr. FORAKER. That is all.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; and there never has been a solitary cont adiction of it, and the statement was in every newspaper in the

Mr. FORAKER. I have seen it contradicted. I saw the statement to which the Senator refers. I assume it was the same one. General Merritt was the officer to whom I saw the statement attributed.

Mr. MONEY. That is the one.

Mr. FORAKER. I saw in the paper the next day a contradiction, and I have seen it repeatedly contradicted.

Mr. MONEY. By whom?
Mr. FORAKER. By the newspapers.
Mr. MONEY. By whom?
Mr. FORAKER. By the newspaper men, by the correspond-

I never saw any contradiction.

Mr. FORAKER. It was contradicted in the same way that it vas stated. It was simply a newspaper report or a story running through the press

Mr. MONEY. I am very happy to hear that it has been contradicted. I never heard it before, and I very cordially acquit General Merritt of having said any such thing if anybody contradicts that he did say it. I am very glad to know that an American general did not utter such a sentiment. I spoke from what the newspapers said, and they all said it. I saw it in a number of them, and I never saw any contradiction.

But, Mr. President, we have something to do in the Philippine Islands, and when you talk about withdrawing the Army, when you talk about pacification, it will not do for you to imagine that a lull in the conflict there is a permanent settlement. That archipelago is like a range of volcanic cones. An eruption in one is a relief, but then another and still another bursts forth. It is to continue a long time, I am afraid. I say that from my knowledge of the character of the people and from their continued uprisings against the Spanish people.

I hope, however, that something will be done which will at least stop the enormous waste of money and blood, or rather life, for there is very little blood shed in these battles. The people die of fevers and dysentery and diseases of that sort. It is the hospitals that claim the victims and not the battlefields. Those people seem to have some readiness for fighting, but they do not eem to understand the business of conducting war; and always expect that the American soldier will always defeat any force against him, civilized or uncivilized. We all have that much confidence in our people. We all have that confidence in the American soldier, in the composite strain of blood which has put us in the forefront of the people of the world.

But after a while we must do something radical and positive with those islands. We must do something substantive and afwith those islands. We must do something substantive and affirmative. We must say that those people have some rights or that they have none; that they are citizens or vassal subjects; that their country is part of the United States or that it is not a part of the United States. If it is foreign, then we are to understand that, and if we are to hold them as a mere military occupation. tion we ought to know that, because then we begin a new era of American history. We take an untried path and we put ourselves in the attitude of those people who have endeavored by fame of conquest and the subjugation of other people to establish their greatness. Whether we are to join the ranks of those people is to be determined. In the meanwhile the American people are making up their minds about this matter.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Maine?
Mr. MONEY. Certainly.
Mr. HALE. I see plainly how the Senator feels and that he looks upon the situation with great apprehension. I do not like it myself. I am full of the gravest forebodings about the whole condition there; and I fear with the Senator that it will grow worse instead of better. I am not inclined to believe that in the present condition in the Philippine Islands you can successfully mix military and civil government. It is anomalous. No Euromix military and civil government. It is anomalous. No European nation that has ever adopted the colonial policy has ever thought of doing it for years and years, and yet here is the situation. I want to ask the Senator, and I do not do it in a partisan way, because the Senator is a thoughtful man and a student of history what does be think earlied by the particular to use his world be deep near to use his world. way, because the Senator is a thoughtful man and a student of history, what does he think could be done now, to use his words, words of ample description, in a substantive and affirmative way—they are extremely good words and describe the real problem—in that direction if affairs were changed and the control of the situation was with him and his friends?

Now I do not ask that question in the clichtest decree in a

Now, I do not ask that question in the slightest degree in a political way or as opening up a political debate or as in any way a taunt, but I ask the Senator whether, when he is portraying the difficulties which I see, he has thought out any policy which would be substantive and affirmative, to use his words, that he would urge upon an administration of his political friends if would drige upon an administration of his pointed friends in they had charge of the Government?

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I will answer the distinguished Senator from Maine with readiness, because I have thought about it. I want to say now that I express nobody's views but my own. I do not stand here as the mouthpiece of my party or of any section of it or of any membership of it. I simply speak for myself. I have thought about it a great deal, and I have thought about it always from the American standpoint, not wishing nor pretending falsely to wish a better government for the Filipinos. Let them go where they please and take care of themselves, so far as the American people are concerned; and that is what every one of you think.

Mr. FORAKER. Do you want them to do that immediately?
Mr. MONEY. I am coming to that point.
Mr. FORAKER. The reason I ask the question is this. It is not an idle question. The minority of the Philippines Committee have reported a substitute measure for the Philippine tariff bill, have reported a substitute measure for the Philippine tariff bill, in which they provide that all laws and rules and regulations now in force shall continue in force and operation until a stable government is established, after which we shall withdraw. So I say it is a pertinent inquiry, whether they should immediately go where they please, or after a while.

Mr. MONEY. I was answering the question propounded by the distinguished Senator from Maine, and when I get through with that I will pay attention to my friend, the Senator from Obio.

Mr. FORAKER. I was by your courtesy asking you Mr. FORAKER. I was by your courtesy asking you—
Mr. MONEY. It is all right. I have no objection to it at all.
It reminds me of the story of a drummer, or perhaps a commercial traveler would be a better term, who weighed about 350 pounds. Having spent all Saturday night in a game of poker, he was very tired the next morning, and went to church in order to get a good nap. The preacher was exhorting his congregation and calling upon them to rise upon certain propositions. He announced his first proposition, and a great many knelt down. He then said, "All who want to have their friends prayed for, kneel down." A great many knelt down. At last he said, "Let all who want to go to heaven get down on their knees;" and our who want to go to heaven get down on their knees;" and our friend, weighing 350 pounds, could not kneel down without having a derrick to lift him up. The preacher walked out of the pulpit, put his hand on the man's shoulder, and said to him, "My friend, do you not want to go to heaven?" He replied, "Yes, sir; but I am in no hurry."

Answering still the Senator from Maine, and that will answer also my friend from Ohio, I have this view about the settlement of the Philipping question. I do not know that it is of earlier.

of the Philippine question. I do not know that it is of any im-

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator excuse me if I interrupt him again?
Mr. MONEY. Certainly I will excuse the Senator. With pleasure I will hear him.

Mr. FORAKER. What I referred to was the provision in the substitute of the minority on the Philippine Committee for the tariff bill reported by the majority of the committee. It reads

That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a stable government, and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under their authority.

What I wanted to know from the Senator, when he made the remark which caused me to interrupt him, was whether he was in accord with this provision of the substitute measure which came from your side of the Chamber. It seems to have been well considered and to be a sort of platform or programme of operation with respect to the Philipping. with respect to the Philippines. But it goes on. I did not read all that I should have read:

That as soon as the results have been accomplished, it is declared to be the purpose of the United States, which the President is directed to carry into effect, to withdraw from said islands and leave the government, control, and sovereignty thereof to the inhabitants of the same, retaining only such military, naval, and coaling stations as may be designated by the Government of the United States.

That until the people of the islands shall establish a government, as hereinbefore provided, all laws, rules, and regulations now in force for the government of the islands and the raising of revenue therefor shall be in force, except as the same may be in conflict with this act.

In other words, all these acts of tyranny which have been referred to are to continue in full force and operation until the people of those islands shall not only have established a stable government, but shall also have signified a willingness that we may reserve coaling stations, and naval stations, and military stations, and whatever else it may occur to us as proper that we should retain there.

Now, what I wanted to know was whether the Senator subscribed to this substitute proposition which comes from his party, or whether he was proposing to act independently of it and not delay at all our withdrawal, but cut loose and let them go as indicated immediately, without benefit of clergy.

Mr. MONEY. Will my friend from Ohio now permit me to answer the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FORAKER. You have my permission to do anything you want to do.

Mr. MONEY. I am greatly obliged to the Senator for his

Mr. FORAKER. But I would be glad if before you take your seat you will answer the question I have put.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator from Maine asked me to say for myself, referring to it in a substantive way, what I would do. I distinctly stated in reply that I did not represent anybody but myself, that I represented no party, nor section, nor any considerable membership in the party; and I was going to tell him what I would do if I had the power to do it, that is, if I could vote the Senate of the United States. If I could hypnotize the Senate for five minutes, there would be peace and justice in the islands there.

But as I can not do that, I will await my time.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator's observation did not escape me, and, making it with reference to the particular statement he was about to make, I wanted to know whether it applied also to this general programme which has been marked out by this measure.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator asks what I am subscribing to in this general programme. I am making one here of my own just

Mr. FORAKER. Then I will not ask the Senator the further question, if he did subscribe to it.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to hear it all. I have plenty of time, and you are welcome to it.

Mr. FORAKER, I suppose I could get time on my own account if I wanted it, but the Senator is always very agreeable and

Mr. MONEY. Consider it unlimited and go ahead.

Mr. FORAKER. I simply wanted to know, if you did subscribe to it, how long, in your opinion, we would be likely to have to remain in the Philippines waiting for the establishment of a stable government and the accomplishment of all these other purposes, including the fulfillment of all our guaranties to Spain, etc., before we could withdraw.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I recollect that when the Senators who served on the Commission that negotiated the peace of Paris made their several statements one after the other in this Chamber, I asked the question of one of those negotiators how chamber, I asked the question of one of those negociators in the many regiments he thought it would take to keep peace in the islands, and he said five. His opinion was drawn from the testimony of General Merritt, who went to Paris to give his ideas to the Commission. He said it would take five. We have now, I believe, upon the authority of the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], about 70,000 there, and yet they declare that registering is about recovery.

declare that pacification is about secured.

declare that pacification is about secured.

Now, going on with my scheme of pacification, I would do this, I will say in answer to the Senator from Maine, if I can have the honor of the attention of the Senator from Ohio: In the first place, if I were the President of the United States I would withdraw the civil Commission instantly and dissolve every act they have done. As far as possible I would undo what we have done. I would act the part of Penelope, unweaving at night what I had I would act the part of Penelope, unweaving at night what I had woven in the day, until there was nothing of the texture left of that piece of work. Then I would authorize and direct the general commanding the army in the Philippines to give notice to the leading people of the islands that we wanted to enter into friendly parley with them as to the future of their islands, and I believe that in less than twenty-five days there would not be a hostile native in the whole archipelago from north to south. Give them an assurance that we wanted first pacification, the establishment of order, the protection of property, and the right of alien residents there, and also of the church property and the churches, and general civil rights and otherwise. Let them have an assurance that that was our intention and we had withdrawn all idea of holding them in subjection and denying them a national independence.

I wish to say now to the distinguished Senator from Maine that the most distinguished Senator who ever sat in this Chamber from he most distinguished Senator who ever sat in this Chamber from New England said that when any people of sufficient number and covering a considerable territory, homogeneous in language and customs, demanded a national independence they were entitled to it, and the United States would always express itself in favor of doing it. I refer to letter of Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, to Baron Hulseman, the Austrian minister at Washington, concerning the revolt of the Hungarian Magyars.

After having done that, when those people threw down their reverse as they corrtainly would for these would be no longer as arms, as they certainly would, for there would be no longer a motive in continuing warfare, then the people fighting with bolo knives and spears and whatever arms they can find convenient to their hand would go home to their rice fields and to their families.

Then the leading people of the Visayas and the Tagalogs, who, as I said, are the civilized people and the educated people of the country, would deputize their leading men, and an organization could be made under the direction of the general which would be perfectly satisfactory to the people.

It would not give them a government like ours, because they are utterly incapable of ever conducting a government like ours. The oriental mind, if I am not mistaken, is incapable of conceiving such a government as this and much more incapable of conducting We find the Latin nations mixed with the Indians in this hemisphere from the Rio Grande to Patagonia. They have constitutions and laws as beautifully written as the Decalogue itself, founded and modeled on our own Constitution, and we know that endless pronunciamentos follow each other like the shining glass in the kaleidoscope when it is turned. In the blood of that people there is an incapacity for a government like this, and it is senseless (I use a strong word, with no disrespect to anybody) to ever expect that such a people shall have a self-governing

We are not too sure of our own success yet. We are young. One hundred and twenty-five years is not much in the life of a great nation like this, and we can not feel absolutely sure that we to-day will give perpetuity to the free institutions that mark the Government of this people. We are yet uncertain about it. I do not believe the French will ever have a real republic. It is a military republic now.

So, Mr. President, I do not believe that the Malay will ever be competent, although so great a man as Admiral Dewey said he knew them well, and on two occasions he said they are quite capable of having a self-government. But I understand he did not mean a republic. People have a capacity for self-government that is inborn in them. The forefathers of this people here had different strains of blood drawn from different nations of Europe. Those of the principal branches knew what liberty was, and they could govern themselves without a master Whether they lived in the slashes of Friesland, in the mountains of Thuringia, in the Black Forest, or in the short hills where Varus lost his legions, it was all the same. They knew what liberty was. It is in the blood yet, and I hope it will live forever here.

But it was not so with the other people of the world. We speak lightly of giving them a better government, meaning our own. What other nation in civilization has such a government? The Swiss cantons, perhaps, in their confederacy, which is nothing but a confederacy in a group of mountains, speaking four languages, and without a standing army of any sort, and yet with the best army in Europe. They are managed, because, with the free blood that came down from a thousand years of heroic ancestors, they have maintained their independence in the heart of Europe, partly by their own courage and fortitude, and partly because it was to the interest of the great powers of Europe to have a little buffer State right in the middle to prevent attrition between the great powers; and so upon sufferance they are living there.

Now, if these people are incapable of our sort of government, why should we seek to impress it upon them? I said a while ago that in the Congress of the provisional government organized by Aguinaldo, sitting at Malolos in November, 1898, composed of 83 members, there were more university graduates than ever sat in this Chamber at one time. That is true; but if every man in the Philippine Islands was a university graduate they could not managea self-governing republic. They might make a good monarchy.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President.

agea self-governing republic. They might make a good monarchy.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?
Mr. MONEY. Certainly, with great pleasure.
Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator if he does not believe the testimony that in a large part of that archipelago there were village governments, peaceful, orderly, and successful, when we declared war upon them?

Mr. MONEY. I am quite sure of it.

Mr. MONEY. I am quite sure of it.
Mr. HOAR. General Washington said that that was the great test of the capacity for self-government, and he attributed the great success of this people to the fact that we were able to maintain town governments in so large a portion of our territory. The phrase which I have just used is not General Washington's about the test

Mr. MONEY. I understand.
Mr. HOAR. But that is the substance of what he said. I did not propose to interrupt the Senator.
Mr. MONEY. I am very glad to be interrupted.
Mr. HOAR. The Senator has two or three mortgages already upon his time which he has not yet redeemed. I believe that that people is as fit for self-government and to establish a republic as any government ever was on the face of the earth when it first established a republic, with the exception of our own.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, it is painful with me to disagree with so learned and excellent an authority as the senior Senator
